The people who I was able to lean on during the pandemic was my friends. They gave me a place to stay when I was about to be homeless, they gave me food to eat and a long time job that I grew to love and make lots of cool new friends. They were even helping me out with getting my license and health care, I definitely consider them to be my second family. There is a lot of things that NJ could have done better, but what I mainly think they could have done better was work on these unemployment offices and their workers. They had plenty of time to prepare themselves and was well aware of the amount of people that would have lost their small self owned businesses and become unemployed, yet there are still hundreds of thousands of unemployed mothers and fathers that aren't able to provide for their kids or on the verge of getting kicked out of their homes. As a victim of this we need to do better. I was in a dark state in my life once, I wish I could take back but sometimes in life you have to go through something that completely destroys you so you to figure out who you really are.

That's what happened to me in 2020 or as I call it the death year.

We lost a lot of great people that year... legends... icons... to famous movie actors but in those deepest darkest times I was still able to find happiness with my friends my supportive girlfriend and a lot of peaceful self reflecting.
