Army, Air Force participate on joint exercise: Eagle Flag

By Staff Sgt. Armando Vasquez, 108th WG/PA

The 108th Contingency Response Group is a rapid-deployment unit designed at the initiative of Air Force leadership to be a first-in force that will secure an airfield, establish and maintain field operations.

Tailored for a specific mission, the CRG incorporates more than 20 military specialties and it comprises of approximately a 120-person unit ready for deployment around the globe with no more than 12 hours notice.

From their inception in 2008 into a contingency response group, the 108th CRG's goal has been to become fully operational capable (FOC) certified as soon as possible. And this past week, they took another step towards that goal, as they participated in an exercise designed to strengthen their capabilities, exercise Eagle Flag 2011 at Lakehurst Naval Station, N.J.

They achieved initial operation capable status after Eagle

Flag 2010, said Senior Master Sgt. Grieg Moore, flight commander for the security forces at the 108th CRG. "Now we want to be FOC certified."

During that exercise, which was also held here at Lakehurst Naval Station, called for a play scenario in which the 108th CRG was tasked with opening an air base and provide humanitarian relief after a hurricane passed through an area on the East coast.

Changing the scenario, Eagle Flag 2011 tasked the New Jersey Air National Guard unit into a Joint Task Force Port Opening operation. Along with active duty components from Joint Base Langley-Eustis, Va., the 633rd Mission Support Group and the Army's 688th Rapid Port Opening Element, the JTFPO operation required these units to deploy to a fictional region somewhere of the north eastern coast of Africa and rapidly open and establish an aerial port of debarkation in the country of Nessor that would allow for additional forces into the region. Operation Scorpion, as the fictitious operation was called, was a joint coalition effort between U.S. Armed Forces and local Nessorian military to counter terrorism operations and bring stability to the region.

For the Army's 688th RPOE, the training done during the week was critical as they were looking for certification as a JTFPO operational capable element, said Army Maj. Joe Borovicka, commanding officer of the 688th RPOE.

“Tons of lessons learned during the exercise,” said Borovicka. “We needed to identify our strengths and weaknesses and get better for the next alert cycle.”

On the other hand, for the 108th CRG, this scenario allowed them to “be part of an exercise in which we used our own equipment and personnel,” said Lt. Col. Lawrence Klein, commander of the 108th CRG’s Global Mobility Readiness Squadron. “This Eagle Flag was a readiness exercise, next year’s Eagle Flag will be to validate as JTFPO qualified.

Pfc. Eric Duran, a cargo specialist with the 688th RPOE, said he was glad to be helping the 108th eventually achieve certification.

And the Pico Rivera, Cal., resident did his part by transporting on his HEMMET numerous pieces of cargo from the aerial port of debarkation to a forward node.

“I’ve put in about 100 miles per day, travelling back and forth on this operation,” said Duran. “This is good training.”

The help reciprocity went both ways. When the 688th RPOE found themselves short of drivers during one of the missions, 108th CRG Capt. Joseph Schultz stepped in. Since he had prior service with the Army and was trained on the HEMMETS, Schultz quickly familiarized himself with the truck and went out on a convoy with the Army unit, thus allowing them to continue their mission without any interruption.

As both units move into the direction of eventually becoming JTFPO qualified, they understood the importance of working together.

“The 108th were excellent to work with,” said Borovicka. “I would go on alert with them any time.”

And that sentiment was echoed by Col. Robert Brazel, the 108th CRG commander.

“I hope this becomes a long lasting relationship,” said Brazel.
