Being prepared

By Maj. Gen. Glenn K. Rieth, The Adjutant General - New Jersey

Before 2007 has even ended, Soldiers of New Jersey's 50th Infantry Brigade Combat Team have begun the Soldier Readiness Process (SRP) at our Joint Training and Training Development Center. These are some of the first steps in the long road to mobilization and deployment. 2008 will see half of the Garden State's Soldiers deploying to Iraq. But whether deployed overseas or operating on our own turf, our Hometown Team is getting the job done!

Maj. Gen. Glenn K. Rieth addresses the Soldiers and Airmen of the 21st Civil Support Team during the Change of Command ceremony held at the National Guard Armory in Lawrenceville on Nov. 28. Photo by Tech. Sgt. Mark Olsen, NJDMAVA/PA.

Lt. Gen. H. Steven Blum, Chief of the National Guard Bureau, on a recent visit with Army National Guard troops deployed in support of Operation Iraqi Freedom, expressed his appreciation for their service and sacrifice and willingness to serve their country. He stated that, "When you call up the Guard, you call up America." Well, the New Jersey National Guard has answered that call, and stands ready for future contingencies.

Our Embedded Training Team (ETT) is doing well, and indications are that it will continue the great work of training members of the Afghan National Army. The Security Forces of the 108th Air Refueling Wing are doing good work in Iraq, helping to keep friendly forces safe and our bases secure. There are many other New Jersey Soldiers and Airmen that are deployed individually or in small teams throughout the world. Every one of them is contributing to the security and stability of the various regions in which they are deployed.

I want to take a moment to say "welcome home" to the 108th's 12-person Security Forces team, recently returned from southern Iraq. These Airmen have successfully completed another outstanding job working with our active-duty counterparts in a joint environment. Traffic on Route 95 from BWI notwithstanding, your return two days before Thanksgiving was a blessing to us all.

To the families of our Airmen and Soldiers, I can't stress enough the importance of establishing a rapport with representatives and staff members of the various organizations that exist to support you. I made a plea in the last issue of Guardlife for you to get to know your local Family Readiness and Assistance staff...chaplains... etc.... This is the time to do that...to get to know the men and women whose job it is to help you. This network exists to support our Soldiers and Airmen and, especially during periods of absence, their families.

One more thing, if for any reason a Soldier, Airmen, or family member ever encounters a problem or does not know where to turn...it is my intent to provide a means by which to find an answer. Call the toll-free number 1-888-859-0352 to find a local Family Assistance Center. Whether preparing ahead of time or faced with an immediate, unexpected problem or financial need, keep this number handy.

As the winter months begin to show their dangerous nature, I want to remind all members of our Guard family to be careful out there. Whether on the job, at home, or on the road...make safety a habit! Although it does not seem this way sometimes, we are located in a region of the country where winter storms are not as bad as other parts of the nation. However, don't let this lull you into a false sense of security: prepare now for ice, snow, sleet and whatever else Mother Nature can possibly throw our way this season.

Gift of history

108TH AIRMAN RECEIVES FATHER'S FLAG

108th Security Force Guardsmen Staff Sgt. Harold Beard (center), and Senior Airmen Roberto Oquendo (left), and Timothy Delouise ceremoniously fold a 67-year-old U.S. flag flown here Dec. 7. The flag, a gift to Beard from his father-in-law, flew in Ohio on Dec. 7, 1941 in honor of the fallen at Pearl Harbor, on various U.S. Army posts in Europe during World War II, and on various military posts in Vietnam during the conflict. Beard flew the flag in Baghdad, Iraq, to commemorate its 67th birthday. More than 60 108th Airmen provide security for Sather Air Base, Baghdad, Iraq. (Photo by Staff Sgt. Jennifer Lindsey, USAF).

SATHER AIR BASE, Iraq — I recently received a piece of history in a care package from my father-in-law, Walter Omiecinski.

Inside the package, contained a 48 Star American Flag that was first purchased by Mr. Omiecinski's parents in 1940. The flag was first raised over Walter's boyhood home in Ohio on Dec. 7, 1941 in honor of the fallen at Pearl Harbor.

The flag was then given to an uncle, Bernard Omiecinski, who served as a U.S. Army sergeant during World War II. Bernard Omiecinski took it with him to every post he was assigned.

On Aug. 14, 1944 Sergeant Omiecinski was killed near St. Lo, France shortly after the D-Day invasion. The flag, along with his personal effects, were returned to the United States and back in the care of the Omiecinski family in Ohio.

In 1957, the flag was given to Walter Omiecinski, my father-in-law. Mr. Omiecinski, a Green Beret during Vietnam, and Purple Heart recipient, flew the flag at each post he was assigned during the conflict.

In turn, I flew the flag on Sather Air Base in Baghdad, Iraq on Dec. 7, 2007 — commemorating its 67th birthday. It will be encased, and displayed in a special place in my New Jersey home.

I hope to pass it on to one of my children one day, and they can fly it at one of their military posts, which may not be long from now. My daughter, Courtney, recently graduated from U.S. Air Force Basic Training, and is currently attending technical school to become an intelligence specialist.

MP unit goes through SRP

As any Soldier can tell you, a deployment can be a stressful time filled with anxiety and mountains of administrative paperwork. New Jersey National Guard Soldiers of the 328th Military Police (MP), based at the National Guard Armory in Cherry Hill, are now going through the processes that will give them an experience of a lifetime. Normally Soldiers would be a little apprehensive when they learn that their unit would deploy, but the 328th MPs are genuinely excited about deploying to Iraq.

"I really want to go," said Pvt. Conor McGrath. "I want to say I was a part of something this big." Ever since he could remember, McGrath has had aspirations of becoming a U.S. Soldier, coming from a family with a military background. McGrath had joined the New Jersey Army National Guard right after high school with hopes that the knowledge he will gain from his experiences will get him one step closer to civilian law enforcement.

Our main goal is to make sure that we're fully qualified, fully trained before we hit the sand.

Capt. David I. Rios

The MP's job is dangerous being that it is a combat enhancement class MOS, but that did not stop Pfc. China-Marie Melendez from answering the call. Military Police is one of the few combat MOS in which females can enlist.

"I've always had a sense of patriotism," said Melendez, and after the attack on September 11, she became even more determined to become a U.S. Army Soldier. When not drilling on the weekends, Melendez works as a full-time receptionist and full-time student at a community college. She has also adjusted well to the news of the mobilization, having already enrolled for the spring semester before her deployment.

Although the 328th MP have much more administration and training to do before their mobilization, Capt. David I. Rios, 328th Commander is pleased with the progress of the unit. "Our main goal is to make sure that we're fully qualified, fully trained before we hit the sand," Rios said. "Believe it or not, they [328th MP] are ready to go. They want to go." 🇺🇸

Preparation

50th begins pre-mob medical processing

Photos and story by Sgt. Shawn Morris, 444MPAD

The Army put its promise into practice Nov. 27-28 as nearly 300 troops from the 50th Infantry Brigade Combat Team underwent pre-mobilization medical processing at the Fort Dix Joint Readiness Center.

Approximately 3,100 Soldiers—including a total of 2,600 from the Garden State—are set to deploy with the 50th IBCT this summer. They will be tasked with security forces and detainee operations missions in Iraq.

Conducting such processing during pre-mobilization preparations comes as a result of a policy issued earlier this year that limits Reserve Component mobilizations to no more than one year, inclusive of time spent at the mobilization station, in-theater, and at the demobilization station.

To meet this timeline, units are now required to accomplish certain tasks formerly completed at mobilization stations while still in a pre-mobilization, Reserve Component status.

"They've shifted a lot of the pre-mobilization training to the units," explained Col. Steve Ferrari, 50th Infantry Brigade Combat Team (IBCT) commander. "We're reducing some of the time we'd have to spend at (the mobilization station)."

"The more training we can get done in pre-mobilization, the more time we can spend in-theater," said Ferrari.

Pre-mobilization training includes Soldier Readiness Processing, the Combat Lifesaver course, weapons qualification, driver training, and medical screening, among other activities.

For the Brigade Soldiers to meet the pre-mobilization deployment requirements, New Jersey Army National Guard leadership partnered with Fort Dix mobilization leaders to meet the objectives. Under that plan, the Joint Readiness Center and the Joint Training and Training Development Center are being used to expedite the process.

"As the mobilization time prior to deployment has been condensed, every opportunity to train during the mobilization phase becomes precious," said Col. Judith Robinson, Commander, Walston Medical Support Element.

The 50th IBCT Soldiers received eye exams, immunizations, blood work, and other medical processing during their two days at the Joint Readiness Center. Additional dates for the remaining Soldiers in the brigade are scheduled for the coming months.

"Conducting pre-mobilization medical screening also provides the commanders with more information on the condition of their Soldiers," Robinson added. "It gives them early knowledge of issues that may preclude the deployment of a Soldier, and allows them to find proper replacements or make adjustments early in the deployment planning cycle."

"And for those Soldiers who need further care before deployment," she continued, "it gives them an opportunity to start that care now, and then be able to deploy on schedule with their units." "It's a win-win for the unit and the individual Soldier," she said. 🇺🇸

Lessons learned in Albania

In October, Soldiers from the 2nd Battalion, 113th Infantry participated in back-to-back multi-national training exercises in Albania. The Jersey Soldiers joined 1,100 military personnel from 23 countries participating in the Cooperative Longbow 07 (COLW 07) and Cooperative Lancer 07 (COLR 07) exercises.

Beyond assessing capabilities and interoperability, many important lessons were learned and shared during both exercises. The friendliness and openness of the soldiers in sharing information and training techniques was instrumental in the lesson exchange.

One of the key lessons learned by all was differences in the role of NCOs in various countries. "Other countries do not leverage the chain of command the same way as the U.S.," said 1st Lt. Jason Cornell, 2-113th Infantry.

The only New Jersey Guard battalion to participate in a live fire "shoot-house," the 2-113th Soldiers took the lead in instructing Military Operations in Urban Terrain (MOUT) to the exercise participants on short notice. The well-conducted class in close quarters combat techniques was appreciated by the other military leaders. "You have to choose from whom you want to learn. When I choose, I choose American," said 1st Lt. Ervis Tusha, commander of Lion Heart Coy, 2nd Battalion, Rapid Reaction Brigade, Albanian Army.

"They learned about the respect and how proud each Soldier was for his country, and the heritage of each...culture...and honor...and how proud they were of their lineage," said Capt. Nicholas Calenicoff, C Company Commander, 2-113th Infantry.

Interwoven into the ongoing training of both exercises was a cultural exchange— another unique learning opportunity for all nations. According to Lt. Turan Samidli of the Azerbaijani Army, he learned about the American culture, while relating the rich Azerbaijani culture in turn. Despite the fact that there are different ways of training and working, Samidli added that "We can do something good for the world together."

Even with nearly two-dozen nations cooperating, communicating, training, and exchanging cultures, two simple messages convey the importance of this experience, and the lessons learned here. "This type of international training must be continuous," said Calenicoff. "You can take the best of training from every nation and put it together," added Spc. Peter J. Ashwell, 2-113th Infantry.

ZALL-HERR, Albania - Pershendetje, Yia Su, Salute.

These are just a few greetings heard in Albanian, Greek and Moldovan by Soldiers of C Company, 2nd Battalion, 113th Infantry during the Cooperative Lancer 07 Exercise (COLR 07) conducted in Albania from Oct. 19 - 30.

Nearly 1,000 soldiers from 21 countries were formed into a multinational battalion for COLR 07. The exercise further expanded the relationship forged during the unit level exchange between the Albanian Army and the New Jersey Army National Guard last summer.

"These are the people we are going to work with in the future," noted Pfc. Lamar Reddick, 2-113th Infantry.

According to Lt. Col. Bardhyl Kollcaku, Commander, 2nd Battalion, Rapid Reaction Brigade, Albania the exercise had several objectives including increasing interoperability and crisis response operations and serving as a framework for the 1st Albanian Coy (Company) to be evaluated as part of Albania's goal of joining NATO.

The exercise was divided into three stages and a challenge day. Stage one consisted of individual tasks including improvised explosive device training, the media, mines, first aid, rules of engagement, communications, anti-terrorism, and live fire of weapons such as the AK-47 and SA-80. "We learned that all weapons are pretty much the same," said Sgt. James Bedrossian, 2-113th Infantry.

One of the challenges was the military cultural difference. NCOs are given more authority in some countries and less in others. This challenge was met through mentoring of countries whose NCOs took a lesser role by those nations with stronger NCO corps.

Stage two consisted of squad-level tasks including area, convoy and urban operations with eight 2-113th Soldiers instructing the multinational soldiers in urban and area operations.

Challenge Day provided a change of pace between stages two and three. It consisted of three scored events - running, firing weapons and grenade throwing.

Stage three consisted of company-level operations during a field training exercise. Each of the three companies conducted area, convoy, and urban operations. The final part of the field training exercise culminated with a one-day cordon and search mission. The 2-113th provided evaluators in addition to the battalion staff and medical team.

"It (the exercise) has opened my eyes to a whole new way a military can function," observed Spc. Scott W. Kowalski, 2-113th Infantry.

So no matter what language was used - Pune te mbare (Albanian), Kali-thuya (Greek) or Au avut succes (Moldovan); the meaning was the same - good job.

Brig. Gen. Michael L. Cunniff holds the ceremonial key to the wing's newest KC-135R Stratotanker. Background photo illustrates the aircraft's new tail insignia.

The 108th Air Refueling Wing celebrated the arrival of the first KC-135R Stratotanker with a ceremony attended by distinguished visitors, wing members and retirees on Oct. 15.

Brig. Gen. Michael L. Cunniff told the crowd, "This is a new day in the wing's history," when he spoke.

As the audience watched, the aircraft rolled down the flightline to the hangar and served as a backdrop to the stage. This is the first of eight R-model Stratotankers that will serve the wing.

Congressman Jim Saxton, 3rd District New Jersey, who was instrumental in getting the R-model and other missions to the 108th after the recent Base Realignment and Closure Commission (BRAC), spoke to the guests at the ceremony.

"This is a great day for the 108th," he said. "I never cease to be amazed by the dedication of the men and women of this wing."

Boeing Company's model 367-80 was the basic design for the commercial 707 passenger plane as well as the KC-135A Stratotanker. In 1954, the Air Force purchased the first 29 of the future 732-plane fleet. The Air Force received the last KC-135 in 1965. Gen. Arthur Lichte, Commander, Air Mobility Command told the audience that the R-model sitting on the ramp was from the 60's and not the 50's as the aircraft that have been with the 108th since it became a refueling wing in 1993.

"The professional competency of the members in the 108th is unmatched," stated Maj. Gen. Glenn K. Rieth, The Adjutant General of New Jersey.

As the oversized scissors came together under the direction of Congressman Frank A. LoBiondo, 2nd District of New Jersey; Maj. Gen. Glenn K. Rieth, The Adjutant General of New Jersey; Col. Randall S. King, Commander, 177th Fighter Wing, the ribbon was cut opening the new state-of-the-art alert complex on Oct. 9.

"The 177th Fighter Wing is responsible for defending America from air threats," observed Maj. Gen. Rieth. "This new facility and complex will protect the men, women and aircraft that guard America's skies."

The facility it replaces had served the nation well, from intercepting Soviet Bear bombers off the east coast during the Cold War, to escorting aircraft in distress back to safety.

Costing nearly $13 million, the new alert aircraft shelters, capable of housing F-22 Raptors, and crew quarters will provide a cutting-edge infrastructure to the 177th Fighter Wing's Homeland Defense mission. The 33,000 square-foot facility includes utility support, security and fire suppression systems, emergency generators, communication upgrades and an aircraft apron expansion.

5k raises $3K: Airman's son's scholarship started

More than 154 runners plus a group of volunteers gathered for the 177th Fighter Wing's First Annual Jack Green 5K Run/Walk on Oct. 21. The event was held in memory of Master Sgt. Jack Green, a 26-year veteran assigned to the Avionics shop and his step-daughter Alexa who were killed in an accident on Jan. 16. Proceeds from the Run will go to a special scholarship fund for Jack's son Jake. After receiving a shadowbox of Jack's medals, Lori Green and son Jake started the race. Cruising in first was Liam Dingman, son of Tech. Sgt. William Dingman, with a time of 19 minutes, 20 seconds. First place for women went to Capt. Yvonne Mays with a time of 24 minutes, 21 seconds. The final tally was close to $3,000. Photo by Tech. Sgt. Mark Olsen, 177FW/PA.

Green to solar

By Spc. Pablo G. Vizcaino, 444MPAD; photos by Sgt. 1st Class Robert Stephenson, NJDMAVA//PA

If there was a power source that would last for about four billion years, would you not use it?

What if it was good for the environment and saved you money as well?

You'd be crazy not to use it then.

That's exactly the train of thought that has led the New Jersey National Guard and the Department of Military and Veterans Affairs to become a leader in renewable energy, namely solar energy.

The plan was simple in its efficiency – utilize an often unused asset, a rooftop, and begin work. The existing rooftop of the Joint Training and Training Technology Development Center at Fort Dix proved to be the perfect candidate. Today, it is covered by 952 photovoltaic panels covering an area of 13,000 square feet and providing a total of 181kW of energy, which for those of us who think in more practical terms, translates to energy that can power over 150 homes.

The push for greener energy was far from over, however. A second project would follow, and as with anything the NJARNG does, it always has to be bigger and better than the last.

Finding a suitable place on the rooftops of the Homeland Security Center and United States Property and Fiscal Office warehouse, 1,648 solar panels will serve to generate 321kW of power – once again, 300 homes - and reduce annual CO2 emissions by 261 thousand pounds.

So how much did this all cost? Such an extensive project did require about $1,425,000 funding from both federal and state sources, but thinking long-term, it was actually a bargain. NJDMAVA projects a $150,000 annual savings from utilizing solar power, meaning that the project will pay for itself in just 9.5 years, with net savings after that. The savings to the environment, however, remain priceless.

The two energy systems provide a staunch example of the leading role in renewable energy the NJARNG continues to maintain nationwide, having already won such awards as the Renewable Energy Award presented by the Secretary of the Army Peter Green on Sept. 13, 2006, and by being the largest military-owned solar project on the East Coast.

The Department is currently looking at a third solar energy project at the National Guard Training Center at Sea Girt.

The New Jersey Department of Military and Veterans Affairs partnered with county, state and federal agencies to support the volunteer Stand Down Committees in South and North Jersey.

There are more than 6,500 homeless veterans in New Jersey.

On Sept. 21 the National Guard Armory in Cherry Hill hosted the South Jersey Stand Down. The North Jersey Stand Down was held on Oct. 21 at the John F. Kennedy Pool and Recreation Center in Newark, a new location for the event.

The Army and Air National Guard assisted with both Stand Downs as Soldiers cooked and provided logistics support while 177th Fighter Wing and 108th Air Refueling Wing medical personnel were on hand to help with the health screenings.

Stand Downs provide homeless veterans with access to healthcare, mental health screening, substance abuse counseling, social services availability, religious counseling, a hot meal, a haircut and winter clothing. The program's goal is to bring a wide range of resources together in one location so the veteran can access the various available services and also recognize that the community is concerned.

Last year, 1,151 homeless veterans and their families attended Stand Downs in Cherry Hill and Newark. Stand Downs are grass roots, community-based intervention programs to help veterans battle life on the streets.

Stand Down comes from the military term referring to the removal of exhausted units from the battlefield to a place of security and safety for rest and recovery. 🇺🇸

VETERANS Day WITH SOLDIERS

THE NEWEST OLDEST PRIVATE

By Maj. Carl A. Palmer, JFHQ-NJ/PAO

When Soldiers refer to the "Old Man", they are usually referring to their unit commander.

At Headquarters and Headquarters Company of the 1st Battalion, 114th Infantry located in Woodbury, just the opposite is true. One of the unit's newest members is 40-year old Pfc. Eric Love. Some people make big career choices early in their lives; some make them later.

Love got his first exposure to the military when he was in high school. "I had the opportunity to attend VMI (Virginia Military Institute)," he said. "It wasn't until a summer barbeque in 2006 that I met a recruiter who advised me the Army National Guard extended its age requirement to 42." He did his homework and discovered that the New Jersey Army National Guard had the most areas of interest and abundant benefits. Finally, he was able to fulfill his lifelong dream.

Love was in the middle of a civilian career transition when he spoke to his family about making this choice. "Initially, they thought I was joking," he said. "After several heartfelt conversations, they understood my reasoning and were fully supportive." His kids were more excited than his wife Jill was initially.

Jill's first reaction was "You gotta be kidding me!" Jill, a 43-year old sales representative with Radian Guaranty, later conceded that she had to support such a noble cause. She also admitted her husband had changed while away at training. "He lost weight and his gray hair...since it was shaved off," she joked.

His transition from civilian to Soldier was quick as he soon shipped out to One Station Unit Training (Basic and Advanced Individual Training combined) at Fort Benning, Ga. in September 2006. He was there until January 2007 learning basic and advanced infantry skills.

After sitting behind a desk or making presentations to Fortune 500 companies for most of his working life, he chose infantry as his military occupational specialty (MOS) in order to do something completely different. "I wanted to experience an area that would be demanding and challenging," said Love. "I wanted the toughest training the Army had to offer." When not in uniform, Love is the managing director for Elizabeth Neumann Company, a hospitality consulting firm. He has been in the hospitality industry for 20 years.

Most 40-somethings who are reading this article right now are probably wondering, "How can a 40-year old pull this feat off physically?" After all, Army Basic Combat Training and Infantry Advanced Individual Training (AIT) are very physical and are comprised primarily of 19-24 year olds. "Physically, Basic and AIT weren't that tough," Love claimed. "Keeping in shape all my life and staying healthy prepared me for the demands of daily activity." He scored a 285 on the Army Physical Fitness Test. "I was hoping to obtain a 300," he exclaimed. He was able to meet this challenge by following a daily routine of running, swimming, biking and taking fitness classes.

Not only was a fitness regimen helpful before attending Basic, so were his 40 years of life experiences. "With age comes wisdom," Love explained. "The mental part of Basic wasn't as tough as it might be for younger recruits." Love's observation of today's youth has inspired him to redouble his efforts toward instilling positive values in his own children – Samantha, age 12; Hunter, age 10 and Parker, age 4.

Just like many new recruits, Love is anxious to take advantage of the many benefits the New Jersey Army National Guard has to offer. "I will certainly be utilizing the educational aspects, along with the GI Bill," said Love. "We have also signed up our 10 year old son to the N.J. National Guard Youth Camp at Sea Girt." Although Love already has an Associate's degree in hospitality, he hopes to use his Guard benefits for free education to help finance his bachelor's and eventually a master's degree.

When so many his age are retiring, where will his new part-time career opportunity take him? "I am getting educated on many different areas of interest that have me excited," answered Love, explaining he plans on "serving my country and community for the next 20 years." Whether he plans on remaining in the infantry or takes advantage of other MOS fields, his future career path remains to be seen.

Love still has plenty of time to make these choices. 🇺🇸

For employer support, info is first step

By Kryn P. Westhoven, DMAVA/PA

With thousands of the New Jersey Guard team preparing to mobilize in 2008, keeping their employers educated and aware of the benefits of employing Citizen Soldiers and Airmen falls into the hands of more than 150 volunteers of the Employer Support of the Guard and Reserve (ESGR) New Jersey field committee.

"Our vision is to promote a culture in which all New Jersey employers support and value the military service of their employees," said retired Army Col. Carmen A. Venticinque, ESGR New Jersey Field Committee Chairman.

Since 1972 the state committee has worked to support the all-volunteer service members of the seven reserve components and recognize employers that have demonstrated a commitment to the employees they share with the military.

It is the responsibility of the Guard member to communicate in a timely manner about when he or she has drills, annual training and especially about an upcoming deployment. This communication can go a long way to avoid problems later, along with maintaining a positive working relationship between the employer and Guard employees.

The New Jersey ESGR field committee is training additional members to serve as liaisons with military units. "We will place additional emphasis on our Military Outreach Program so as to ensure that we can assist all Guard members in understanding their rights and obligations under USERRA (Uniformed Services Employment and Reemployment Rights Act) while encouraging them to recognize supportive employers," added Venticinque.

One of the tools available to ESGR to contact and educate employers is the Civilian Employment Information (CEI) data, an initiative through the Office of the Under Secretary of Defense for Personnel and Readiness.

"We will send letters and make personal contact with employers of deployed Soldiers and Airmen," noted Venticinque. The civilian employment information will also be used to invite employers on 'Boss Lifts' to visit 50th Infantry Brigade Combat Team (IBCT) Soldiers training prior to and during their mobilization.

The CEI data is being collected during the pre-mob Soldiers Readiness processing (SRP) for the 50th IBCT or is submitted on an annual basis through the Defense Manpower Data Center web site.

Guard members are encouraged to recognize their employers through the 'My Boss is a Patriot' award and all the way up to the state Pro Patria and national Freedom Award. These awards show Guard members' appreciation for their employers' support and provide the field committee with potential employers that would be eligible for 'Above and Beyond' awards or other state awards. These same employers will also be asked to sign a Statements of Support, which says they pledge to recognize, honor and enforce the Uniformed Services Employment and Re-Employment Rights Act (USERRA); their managers and supervisors will have the tools they need to effectively manage those employees who serve in the Guard and Reserve; and they will continually recognize and support service members and their families in peace, in crises and in war.

Sometimes despite education efforts, expressions of gratitude along with communication between employer and employee, there are problems that need to be resolved. That is when the field committee ESGR Ombudsmen steps in to try to resolve those issues through informal mediation.

There are currently 19 ESGR volunteers in New Jersey, who have received extensive training on USERRA and dispute resolution techniques, who serve as informal mediators between the employer and employee. The Ombudsmen inform and educate the employer and employee on what the law requires and assist in finding a mutually agreeable solution. Those cases that can not be resolved are then referred to the Department of Labor.

It was summed up best by Dr. L. Gordon Sumner, Jr., Executive Director, National Committee for Employer Support of the Guard and Reserve (NCESGR), who spoke at the state ESGR training conference in October.

"Without employer support, we would not have a reserve component."

Hines promoted to brigadier general

The rank of Brigadier General was pinned on the shoulders of Col. Stephen J. Hines at the National Guard Armory in Lawrenceville on Sept. 30.

Brig. Gen. Hines serves as the Deputy Commanding General, 42nd Infantry Division. He recently returned from Bright Star 2007, which combined the 42nd's staff, U.S. Central Command and U.S. Army Central and the Egyptian 9th Armored Division to foster greater military to military relations with participating nations.

Hines enlisted in the New Jersey Army National Guard on Oct. 9, 1971. He was commissioned as a Second Lieutenant upon graduation from the New Jersey Military Academy, Officer Candidate School Class 17, in July 1974. He received a master's degree in geopolitical strategic science from the United States Army War College. He also possesses a bachelor of science. Hines is a graduate of the United States Army War College, Class of 2003.

His military assignments include Rifle Platoon Leader, Mortar Platoon Leader, Tactical Intelligence Officer, Operations Air, Personnel Administrative Officer, and Commander, Headquarters and Headquarters Company with the 1st Battalion, 114th Infantry. While assigned to Headquarters State Area Command, Hines served as the State Marksmanship Coordinator, and Training Branch Chief in the Department Plans, Operations, Training and Military Support Directorate. Following these postings, he was the 50th Brigade Executive Officer from July 1995 to July 1999. The general then served as Squadron Commander, 5th Squadron 117th Cavalry. Hines took command of the 50th Brigade, 42nd Infantry Division on March 1, 2002 and served until Feb. 29, 2004. Following that he served as Chief of Staff-Army, Joint Forces Headquarters, New Jersey Army National Guard.

Mom receives stripe from son

By Staff Sgt. Barbara Harbison, 108ARW/PA

During her recent promotion, Master Sgt. Lisel White (left) had a special person to pin on her latest stripe – her son, Tech. Sgt. Steven Blackstone (right). He was at McGuire Air Force Base, training for deployment to Afghanistan.

The mother and son both joined the military late in 1994; she enlisted before him but he left for basic first. Blackstone has spent his time in the active duty Air Force and is currently working as an information manager for the Air Force Office of Special Investigation. White, on the other hand, has spent her entire military career in the 108th Air Refueling Wing. When she entered the Air Guard, she served in information management but five years ago cross-trained to become a Military Equal Opportunity specialist.

When her son was 17 and looking into joining the Air Force, his recruiter told him about the National Guard. Three days before her 35th birthday, White was sworn into the Guard.

Both Blackstone and White admit that having a family member in the military makes communication about their military lives easier and both continually express admiration for each other's careers. White said that she was, "honored to have Steven here to pin on my rank at the promotion ceremony."

Pride was evident also in Blackstone as he talked about his mother. "I'm proud to have her as one of my fellow Airmen."

Russo receives top reserve award

Spc. Pablo Vizcaino, 444MPAD

Soldiers many times take for granted just how much effort it takes to get gear to link up with them at the right time around the world. Military personnel count on the equipment such as a HMMWV or tank being there, not realizing the behind the scenes work it took to meet their expectations. But it is heartening to know the logistics warriors behind this hard work don't go unnoticed for their efforts.

Chief Warrant Officer 2 Thomas Russo, who serves as the Mobility Officer for the New Jersey Army National Guard's (NJARNG) Joint Forces Headquarters-New Jersey (JFHQ-NJ) became the recipient of the Reserve Component Transportation Corps Regimental Warrant Officer of the Year award for 2006. The prestigious award was for Thomas's service as a major player in the movement of a division worth of equipment and personnel to Iraq and back in support of the Global War on Terrorism.

His accomplishments included direct movement control support to the NJARNG, Fort Dix, Fort Monmouth, and Picatinny Arsenal. Additional support was provided to Army Reserve units stationed in New Jersey, and the Defense Movement Coordinators in New York, Pennsylvania, Delaware, Maryland, Connecticut, and Rhode Island.

Russo also acted as the direct liaison with New Jersey Department of Transportation and New Jersey State Police to ensure that convoys were not interfered with, due to weapons mounted on vehicles, while traveling on county and state roads.

The award he received in October is national in scope. Candidates from all 54 states and territories were judged not only on their military accomplishments, but also their community service.

Russo is no stranger to his community since he coaches a competitive soccer team in Hamilton Township, and serves as a member of the Clifton Mill Townhouse Association.

Present at the award ceremony, which took place during the weeklong Transportation Corps Regimental Review in Fort Eustis, Va., was his wife, Hope Marie. She was able to share in this special occasion. "She was very proud," Russo said. Coincidentally, he reminisced, that week was unusually special because it coincided with the yearly Transportation Ball, which he and his wife were able to attend. "My wife got to meet and greet people; it was our first official function. Dress blues and all, very fun," he said.

So, does he see any more awards in the future? His plans are to put in for another award for 2007, with his chances of winning very high. "Especially with the 50th Brigade going out, there will be a lot of stuff going on," he said.

As if to erase any doubts, Russo concluded, "I just got done moving 20 M1 tanks out to Sierra, Calif."

While no one knows what the future holds, it is safe to assume that equipment will get where it needs to be, as Russo continues to keep the NJARNG moving.

EDUCATION BENEFITS PLENTIFUL AFTER DEPLOYMENT

By Spc. Mark O'Rear, 444MPAD; photo illustration by Tech. Sgt. Mark Olsen, NJDMAVA/PA; Model: Sgt. Marsha Grant

To most Guard Members, the benefits and processes of the Montgomery GI Bill (MGIB) can be a little intimidating.

With the addition of a fairly new set of benefits, the MGIB-Reserve Educational Assistance Program Chapter 1607 (REAP), the odds and ends may seem unfathomable to comprehend. But fear not! There is a light at the end of the tunnel.

Guard Members who are federally mobilized and serve for at least two years of continuous active duty may qualify for the MGIB-AD (Chapter 30). However, if they had served less than two years, they would be entitled to nothing. With the addition of Chapter 1607, REAP, all that is going to change.

Chapter 1607 was created in October of 2004, which made certain individuals who were activated after September 11, 2001 either eligible for education benefits or an increase of current benefits. For service members who have used their GI Bill benefits or their benefits had expired this is a new set of education money. The modification was designed to provide a progressive ladder of MGIB benefits for Guard Members who had not reached that full two year requirement.

Chapter 1607 was designed to provide a progressive ladder of MGIB benefits for Guard Members who had not reached that full two year requirement.

The educational assistance allowed payable under Chapter 1607 is a percentage of the Chapter 30 three-year rate based on the number of continuous days served on active duty. The full-time rate in the table below is the rate for full-time institutional training under Chapter 1607 on or after October 1, 2006. Part-time students would receive less.

Under any one chapter of the MGIB, you may receive a maximum of 36 months of entitlements (units) at the full-time rate. Those eligible for both Chapter 30 and 1607 may receive a maximum of 48 units.

The main differences between the Chapter 1607 and 30 is that the 1607 does not require a $1,200 enrollment. Also unlike the Chapter 30, which expires 10 years after date of discharge, the 1607 has no expiration date and remains active until exhaustion of benefits or the Soldier leaves the Selected Reserve.

The money can be used not only for traditional colleges, but also for licensing or certification programs, technical schools and On-The-Job (OJT) apprenticeships like Helmets to Hardhats.

For more information call the Education Office at (609) 562-0975 or visit the website at www.nj.gov/military/education/index.html.

With all that money and benefits up for grabs, don't miss your chance to cash-in on your education.

Amount of time a Reserve Member Serves on Active Duty	Percentage of Ch. 30 (three-year rate)	Full-time Rate (Eff. Oct. 1, 2006)
90 days but less than one year	40%	$440.40
One year but less than two years	60%	$660.60
Two years or more	80%	$880.80

Nominate your Employer

It is time to remember our employers who supported us during our deployments, UTAs and annual training.

The National Committee for Employer Support of the National Guard and Reserve (ESGR) is encouraging Soldiers, Airmen and their family members to nominate their supportive employers for the prestigious Secretary of Defense Freedom Award. Go to <http://esgr.org/fap.asp?p=form2007> and complete the form; it is just that simple.

The deadline is midnight Jan. 21.

Identity theft and your child

With all the talk of identity theft, one group has been completely forgotten: your children.

In 2004, more than 400,000 children were identity theft victims. Identity thieves are now targetting children because their social security numbers and records have not been used.

To prevent this from happening discuss with your child the importance of keeping their information private and never sharing it with strangers. Also watch the mail for offers from credit card companies or bills; report any suspicious activity to credit bureaus.

For more information on identity theft; go to www.ftc.gov/credit.
