NJNG HOLDS SUICIDE STAND DOWN

Story by Master Sgt. Mark C. Olsen, New Jersey National Guard Public Affairs

“Suicide is the number one priority of the New Jersey National Guard.”

Brig. Gen. Michael L. Cunniff
The Adjutant General

More than 600 Soldiers and Airmen crowded the National Guard Armory drill floor in Lawrenceville for the first New Jersey National Guard Suicide Stand Down Sept. 9, 2015.

September is Suicide Prevention Month with the week of September 7 as National Suicide Prevention Week and September 10 is recognized by the World Health Organization as World Suicide Prevention Day.

The event served to focus on a crisis that plagues the United States military; to reinforce the many resources available to service members and their families and to destigmatize the topics associating with suicide and behavioral health.

“We have a shared responsibility to look out for each other,” said Cunniff.

The most commonly reported service member suicides statistic comes from a Department of Veterans Affairs 2013 report that states 22 service members commit suicide each day, or one every 65 minutes. While women service members kill themselves at more than twice the rate of other women, there are some that feel that number might actually be low – the reason for that is based on that VA study which reported statistics from 21 states and doesn’t include California and Texas.

Regardless of the numbers, military and veteran suicide rates are 50 percent higher than the rest of the civilian population.

The Stand Down emphasized that anyone and everyone can help prevent suicide. The key is recognizing the risk factors.

The Defense Suicide Prevention Office refers to these risk factors as negative life events and include a family history of suicide or of family violence, being faced with a situation of humiliation or failure, loss of job, home, money, status, self-esteem, or personal security; chronic pain; feelings of guilt, anger, or shame; exposure to trauma; a sense of hopelessness; relationship problems; and posttraumatic stress disorder.

Then there are factors that are military specific: Males are more likely to commit suicide, the ranks most commonly affected are usually young Soldiers or Airmen, who have a high-school education, had a divorce or recent relationship failure, experience drug and alcohol abuse, or even have legal, administrative, or financial problems.

And despite increased mental health prevention and outreach, the military culture that values strength and resilience also presents barriers to care. Service members can be reluctant to seek mental health services due to fear of job loss, shame, guilt and being stigmatized by coworkers and loved ones.

“As a culture, we have to diminish the stigma for seeking help,” said Cunniff.

What the Stand Down stressed is that support is only a phone call away.

New Jersey is resource-rich with several peer-to-peer programs. From the New Jersey Department of Military and Veterans Affairs- Vet2Vet (1-866-838-7654) – a hotline manned by former military members to the Military Crisis Line (800-273-8255) for 24/7 crisis support and finally, the New Jersey Hopeline (855-654-6735) a statewide suicide prevention hotline.

Joint Reaction 2015

Story by Master Sgt. Mark C. Olsen, New Jersey National Guard Public Affairs

Soldiers from the New Jersey Army National Guard Joint Training and Training Development Center traveled to Tirana, Republic of Albania, July 12-23, 2015, to participate in Joint Reaction 2015 Disaster Relief simulation exercise.

The exercise was a United States European Command sponsored, computer-assisted simulation of a major natural disaster.

The scenario had an earthquake hit the Albanian city of Elbasan causing numerous casualties and major damage. The participating countries' task was to react to the initial situation, as well as exercise inputs designed to test their ability to respond to various aspects of the crisis.

The regional emergency management exercise was designed to test timely and effective deployment and employment of disaster relief assets, as well as enhance cooperation and interoperability among regional partners of the Balkan Peninsula which includes Albania, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Bulgaria, Croatia, Kosovo, Macedonia, Montenegro, Romania and Slovenia.

The JT2DC team came prepared to the exercise.

The Center, which is located at Joint Base McGuire-Dix-Lakehurst, N.J., has trained battalions and brigades in simulation exercises and the military decision making process. Additionally, they have worked in the Joint Directorate of Military Support Joint Operations Center, New Jersey State Police Regional Operations and Intelligence Center, all of which supported the Super Bowl security, as well as the response to Hurricane Sandy – experience that greatly benefited the countries participating in the exercise.

“The JT2DC and the NJARNG has been very successful in its operations with natural disasters, especially the most recent Superstorm Sandy,” said Lt. Col. Robert J. Yench, Executive Officer, JT2DC. “We shared our experience with the participating nations to improve their planning and response to handle such emergencies.”

sponse was in Tirana with the joint conflict and tactical simulation equipped partners replying to exercise inputs from their own countries to reduce the costs of moving personnel and equipment.

“This exercise was seen as vital to the strong friendship between the country of Albania and New Jersey,” said Yencha.

The JT2DC sent a nine-soldier team who served as observer/controllers to advise and assist the Albanian Armed Forces and the Albanian Ministry of Internal Affairs. They were split between the Local Prefecture's Joint Operations Center in Elbasan, the National Operations Center for Civil-Emergency in Tirana and the Ministry of Defense's Albanian Simulations Center.

“For them to work together in that capacity was unique as they build the emergency management for their country,” said Col. John Langston, Commander, JT2DC. “The things we pointed out to them will help them improve their system.”

Upon the completion of Joint Reaction 2015, the JT2DC members stated that the exercise would not only be a continuation of the relationship that both the Ministry of Defense and the NJNG have shared in the past, but one which the NJNG can share with the Ministry of Internal Affairs National Operations Center for Civil-Emergency, the simulation center and all the participating countries.

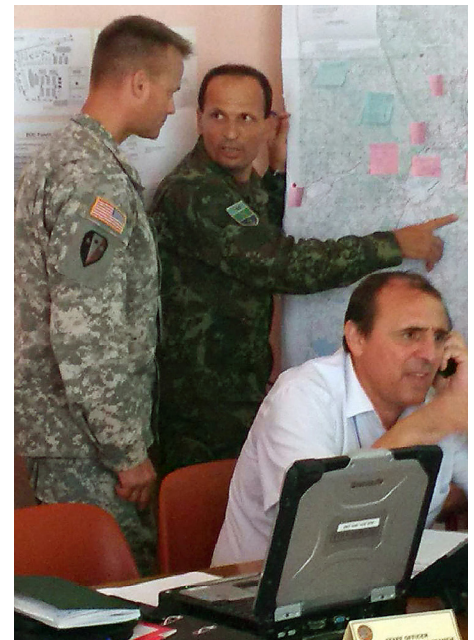

“The exercise enhanced the abilities among member nations of the United States – Adriatic Charter to deploy and employ disaster relief assets to a stricken region in a timely and efficient manner,” said Yencha. “In addition, the exercise served to strengthen relationships among regional, national and local government officials.”
