National Guard Militia Museum opens Civil War exhibit

SEA GIRT, N.J. – The National Guard Militia Museum of New Jersey has opened an exhibit commemorating the Civil War Sesquicentennial, honoring and explaining the state’s contribution to that conflict.

“Visualizing History: A New Jersey Civil War Camp” opened July 1 and runs through the end of 2012.

“Historians estimate as many as 88,000 New Jersey men served in the Union Army during the Civil War,” said 1st Lt. Vincent Solomeno, command historian of the New Jersey National Guard and the museum’s curator. “The new exhibit marks the 150th anniversary of the war by offering visitors the opportunity to explore the histories of New Jersey’s units and the men and women who supported the Union war effort.”

The exhibit, funded in part by grants from the New Jersey Historical Commission, the New Jersey Civil War Heritage Association, and the New Jersey Civil War Sesquicentennial Committee, is a Civil War encampment that features a tent, equipment, supplies, and mannequins dressed in reproduction uniforms worn by “Jerseymen” who fought in the conflict and a New Jersey woman costumed as a nurse.

The exhibit also includes a case of original period firearms of the type used by Jerseymen during the conflict. Visitors can view and learn about the Model 1842 Springfield .69 caliber musket, the Model 1861 Springfield .58 caliber rifle musket, the P53 British Enfield .577 caliber rifle musket and a Spencer.56-.56 caliber rifle. The Spencer was issued in limited numbers to men from the 1st New Jersey Brigade in late 1864.

Established in 1980, the National Guard Militia Museum of New Jersey presents the role of the New Jersey Militia and the National Guard within the context of the larger history of the state. Collections include original and reproduction uniforms, weapons, photographs, artifacts and art from the period of Dutch, Swedish and British colonization through the War for Independence, Civil War and World Wars I and II to the present day, with particular attention paid to the diversity of the New Jersey citizen soldier and his or her experience.

With the exception of state holidays, the museum is open seven days a week. Admission is free and open to the public. For more information, please visit the museum’s web site at <http://www.nj.gov/military/museum/> or call 732-974-5966.

NJ Guardsmen train Afghan artillery soldiers

By Staff Sgt. Wayne Woolley, DMAVA/PA

Think of it as a mini Fort Sill, Okla. in the sands of Afghanistan.

Soldiers from the New Jersey National Guard recently conducted a nine week master gunners' course to train Afghan field artillerymen.

Two dozen senior Afghan officers and non-commissioned officers underwent an intense course modeled after the U.S. Army Field Artillery Officer Basic Course at Fort Still.

Although the training was conducted using Russian-made 122mm cannons, much of the emphasis was on getting the Afghans used to the powerful weapons for indirect fire, a Western-style fighting technique, said Capt. Thomas Weaver, the National Guard officer who created the course.

Indirect fire – launching the shells high into the air for maximum effect on distant targets – was a new concept for the Afghans, who had been using the guns for direct fire, which requires visible targets.

“This was something new for them,” Weaver said. “The cannon itself, they were very familiar with it, but they learned more ways to use it.”

Leaving the Afghan National Army with effective tools to handle its own national defense has been the focus of Weaver's unit, a Mentor Advisor Team made up of a dozen New Jersey National Guardsmen and 20 soldiers from the Albanian defense forces.

There are similar teams with military forces from nearly two dozen nations operating across Afghanistan as part of a NATO effort to build the military skills of individual Afghan National Army Battalions.

The field artillery training was a true multi-national effort, Weaver said.

The Soldiers from New Jersey and Albania worked closely with Portuguese military advisors who are trying to increase the field artillery proficiency across the Afghan Army's 111th Capital Division.

Weaver said the ultimate goal is for the Afghan National Army to learn to marshal the heavy firepower of its field artillery to cover the shortfalls that will come when NATO forces and their airpower leave Afghanistan.

“As we withdraw, artillery will be their most effective tool,” Weaver said. “We want to make artillery sustainable by its self.”

Ergent Gremi, Albanian Army, observe Artillery Coy 4/2/111th Capital Division, Afghan National Army, as they conduct crew drills on a Russian made D-30 artillery weapon system. The training is part of a nine-week program for both Afghan field artillery Coys, who fall under the 111th Capital Division. Photo below, Capt. Celebrating Our Veterans to host Veterans Freedom Festival

Celebrating Our Veterans is sponsoring their first ever Veterans Freedom Festival Aug. 11 from 12-6 p.m. at the Elks Lodge# 580.

The festival's goal is to raise money for disadvantaged local Veterans and their families. Part of the proceeds will also be going to the "Officer Christopher Reeves Fund" in memory of the Millville police officer who was killed in the line-of-duty.

The event kicks off at noon with a Veterans Ceremony led by some of New Jersey's most decorated Veterans and state politicians. The Veterans Freedom Festival will feature more than 10 bands performing on three stage areas, a kids zone, horseshoe tournament, Chinese auction, food and merchandise vendors, silent art auction, renown speed painter "Ed Peahota" painting 2 patriotic murals, and more.

More importantly, admission to the festival is FREE.

Please visit our website www.celebratingourveterans.com for more details. Millville Elks Lodge# 580 is located at 1815 E. Broad Street in Millville.
