NEW-JERSEY ALMANAC,

FOR THE YEAR OF OUR LORD

1833,

BEING THE FIRST AFTER BISSEXTILE, AND UNTIL THE FOURTH OF JULY, THE

Fifty-Seventh of American Independence.

*Containing the Rising, Setting and Eclipses of the Sun and Moon; Aspects of the Planets; Judgment of the Weather:
the time of High Water at New-York, &c. &c. together with a variety of useful and entertaining matter.*

BY DAVID YOUNG, PHILONT.

When Sol's bright rays first tinge the eastern sky,
Runs his accustom'd course and sinks behind
The western mountains; when Luna reigns on high—
All this, and more, in th' Almanac you'll find.

Note.—It is High Water at Elizabeth-Town Point, New-London, Tarpaulen-Cove, Cape Henlopen, Sandwich Bay, Cockspur in Georgia, and Brunswick in North-Carolina, about the same time as at New-York.

A French emigrant having been but a very short time in England, was invited to partake of a large bowl of punch, a liquor he had never tasted before, and which did not agree with him. Speaking of his entertainment next day, but forgetting the name of the beverage, he asked, 'Vat de calla dat liquer, dat be all contradiction, where is de brandy to make it strong, and de water to make it weak; de sugar to make it sweet, and de lemon to make it sour?'—'Punch, I suppose you mean.'—'Ay, punch begar,' said Monsieur, 'it almost punch my prain out.'

THE TYTHING-MAN.

There lived a few years since in a little town in Connecticut, a man by the name of Standfast Holdfast, who was at the same time a captain of the militia, a deacon of the church, and a tything-man of the town. He was also a wheelwright, a farmer, and a tavernkeeper. His house was just opposite, and within a few yards of, the church; and his sign, which bore on one side the device of a punch-bowl, and on the other the effigy of Old Nicholas himself, with his horns and tail, might be heard creaking from morning till night and from night till morning, to the great annoyance of his guests.

During fair weather the deacon farmed it; during foul, he made and mended wagons, wheel-barrows, and other vehicles; and on Sundays he made money by taking up travellers and exacting a fine.—He also derived a farther profit, by detaining as long as possible those thus arrested, and charging very bountifully for meat, drink, and lodging for themselves, and provender and stabling for their horses.

He was accounted an exceedingly devout man, a regular attendant at church, and a strict observer of family worship. But sooth to say there was a great deal of worldly prudence at bottom, which operated effectually to prevent his spiritual concerns from ever becoming detrimental to his carnal interests. Though he usually performed his family devotions in a front room and with the window open, so that his pious example might be duly noticed by his neighbours—there was another motive for this arrangement, namely, the convenience of keeping an eye upon the street, to see if any travellers were passing on Sunday, and if any were driving up to his tavern on a week-day. But sometimes his devotions were entirely omitted on a morning, when his worldly business drove him; but these omissions were supplied with interest on the succeeding evening, the first rainy day, or at all events as soon as business began to slacken a little; so that, to use a phrase of his own, though he borrowed a great many spare hours of the Lord, he was careful to square up all accounts in the course of the year.

At church, instead of sitting with his brother deacons in the official seat beneath the pulpit, he constantly took his station in a pew on the front side of the meeting-house, looking out upon the main road and upon his tavern opposite, and also so near the door that he could slip out in a moment of time, and without much disturbing the congregation. Here, with his twofold prudence, which at the same time looked heavenward and earthward, he could listen to the preaching with his ears, while he kept his eyes devoutly fixed on the road, to see if any traveller had the impiety to attempt passing by—in which case he immediately sallied forth and arrested him.

Of all his various duties there was none which he discharged with so much zeal as this. Indeed, he had a threefold motive; he excented the law of the State in his office of tything-man; he showed his religious horror of Sabbath-breakers; and what was more important still, as we hinted above, he secured a guest for the benefit of his tavern. For though it vexed his soul beyond endurance to see people disregarding the Sabbath, it did not go against his conscience in the least to make a pretty penny out of these vile transgressors. Indeed it was a principle of his, as prudent as it was pious, that the saints have a perfect right to prey devoutly on the substance of the sinners.

But the office of tything-man, however important to religion and morals, is usually subject to no small degree of popular odium; and this is always increased exactly in proportion to the zeal and vigilance with which the office is discharged. It is not every traveller that takes his arrest and detention in good part; and some, with most unaccountable ingratitude, instead of thanking the devout tything-man for arresting them in the 'bread road,' would as likely as not meet his kind offices by calling him a meddling hypocrite and by knocking him down.

Such misfortunes had not unfrequently happened to deacon Standfast Holdfast. But he bore them all with Christian patience and fortitude—considering that on the whole he made money, discharged his duty to the State and the congregation, and finally purchased for himself an enviable rank among the saints. He set down these insults and oppositions as the buffetings of Satan; and only grew the more zealous in the execution of his office, the more he was insulted and opposed.

It is true, there were some travellers who submitted peaceably to the arrest, and without opposition discharged their fines, rather than make any disturbance, or, by opposing the execution of the law, subject themselves its further exactions. But there were certain fellows who took the liberty of travelling on a Sunday, who proved themselves either too turbulent or too cunning for the tything-man's management. Among these may be particularly mentioned the New-York Dutchmen and the Yankee pedlars of tin-ware and other notions. We will give an instance or two by way of illustration.

As deacon Standfast Holdfast was sitting in his pew one winter Sunday, looking out as usual upon the high-road, he descried a stout looking man, in a fur cap and gloves, with a sleigh and a pair of fine horses. The general aspect of the man and of his equipage was rather forbidding. But the devout desire of discharging his duty, and the temptation withal of making money, promptly decided the course of the tything-man. He rushed incontinently from the church, seized hold of the horses' reins, and ordered the traveller in an authoritative voice to stop.

'Shtop!' exclaimed the stranger, who was fresh from the German Flats, 'vat for shall I shtop, ha?'

‘Againsht de law! de dyvel it is! And wat tinks you I cares for de law of your tam Yankee land, ha? I be’s one Dutchman, and goes where I pleashes on de Sunday, and all odder days.’

‘Yes, but you can’t go where you please here on a Sunday. I’m the tything-man of the town.’

‘Well, if you be’s de tireshome man of de town, git out of de way and not drouble me.’

‘My duty forbids—you must stop till to-morrow.’

‘Wat! shtop till to-morrow! I tells you I will not shtop—so let go mine horses, before I knocks you down.’ Thus saying the Dutchman began to suit the action to the word, by making ready his heavy-loaded whip, when the deacon bawled out—

‘Constable! constable!’

The traveller, coolly looking round and seeing the constable issuing from the church, exclaimed—‘Oh, mishter tireshome man, you may cry conshtobble conshtobble, as much as you pleashe—I don’t care one shtraw for all de conshtobbles and tireshome mens in Connecticut.’

By this time the constable had got within reach of his loaded whip, when, letting drive, he laid him sprawling in a snow-bank; and giving his corn-fed horses a cherrup and a crack, they started suddenly forward, upset the deacon, passed glibly over his body, and went away with a speed that all the tythingmen and constables in the state, had they been sound in wind, limb, and courage, could not have arrested.

The catastrophe was noticed from the church, and half the congregation poured forth to the aid of the vanquished. They carried them into the deacon’s house, where the constable, being more seriously frightened than hurt, pretty soon recovered. But the deacon was found to have a broken leg and sundry severe bruises, all which confined him to the house for six weeks, to his exceeding great regret—for during this confinement his soul was every Sunday vexed to the quick by the wicked and insulting manner in which he beheld the laws of the state set at nought—his own sacred authority violated, and his usual gains cut off, by the shameful impunity with which travellers proceeded quietly on their way.

But at length the deacon recovered, and was again seen at church, looking out from his pew as attentively as ever in search of the lawless and ungodly traveller. His pious zeal was rewarded with its usual success, and many odd shillings were added to the income of his tavern, his farm, and his wheelwright’s shop. But he had the misfortune one Sunday to arrest a pedlar’s wagon, loaded with all manner of notions, drawn by a raw-boned hungry horse, and driven by a man as hungry as his steed.

‘I wish you would allow me to proceed on my journey,’ said the pedlar—'I have fifty miles to go this very day, and I hate possibly to be detained.'

'Make yourself easy,' said the tything-man, 'you cant go another step to-day.'

'But consider,' said the pedlar 'it is now almost noon, and I want to get to an uncle's I have a little ahead to get something to eat.—Neither I nor my horse have eaten a mouthful of any thing since two hours before sunrise; and we're getting to be as hungry as a couple of graven images.'

'Never mind your uncle's,' returned the deacon, 'you shall have plenty to eat and drink here: and as you cannot be allowed to go a step further, you may as well make the best of it. I'll put up your horse, and lodge and feed you till to-morrow morning, when you may proceed on your journey.'

'Well, if I must submit I must, as aunt Jerusha Applegate said when she was going to be married.' Thus saying, the pedlar very composedly yielded himself to the authority of the tything-man. His horse was put up and well fed with hay and oats, and his master having comforted his own stomach with a chunk of cold roast beef, a pumpkin pie, and a mug of cider at the invitation of the deacon, accompanied him to church to hear the afternoon service; where he paid such good attention to the discourse and demeaned himself with such apparent devotion, that the deacon was half inclined to think he had made a convert where he only expected to make money.

The pedlar ate a hearty Sunday supper (which in New England includes the dinner,) saw that his steed was well attended, took a comfortable luncheon and a mug of cider just before going to bed, retired to rest, slept like a monarch, and rose in the morning to depart.

'You may as well stay to breakfast,' said the deacon.

'Well, just as you say,' answered the pedlar—how long will it be before you'll have breakfast?'

'Not above an hour—and in the meantime your horse will be filling himself with hay and oats.'

'Well, just as you say, deacon,' again replied the pedlar—'you see I'm guided entirely by you. But while I'm sitting still, I may as well take a stroll round the village, and see if I cant make a market for some of my notions.'

The pedlar finished his stroll, attended family devotions along with the tything-man, and acquired so hearty an appetite for breakfast that he seemed during that meal to lay in a week's provisions. His horse had done nearly equal justice to his keeping; and like his master, seemed to have laid in a store for several days to come.

Every thing being now ready, the pedlar mounted his wagon, and said—'Good morning, deacon—I'm much obliged to you for your preaching and your entertainment—and if ever you come our way—'

‘But you’re not going without paying your bill!’

‘Yes, but I am though. You compelled me to stop, and invited me to eat, and drink, and sleep, and all them-are things—which, of course, I couldn’t very well refuse. But as for paying for them—I couldn’t think of such a thing, deacon. So good bye to you—’

‘But recollect, sir, I keep a tavern, and it isn’t my business to entertain people gratis. Here is your bill for eating, drinking, lodging, horse-keeping, &c. amounting in all to—’

‘Never mind the amount, deacon—I’ll return the favour, when I become tything-man, and find you travelling on Sunday.’

‘You wont pay your bill then.’

‘Not I—I’m much obliged to you, deacon.’

‘Then I must compel you. Here, Hopeful,’ speaking to his eldest son, ‘take this bill to ’Squire Plumper’s, and get a writ; and also get a warrant for this man for travelling on the Lord’s day.’

‘You may save yourself that trouble and expense, deacon,’ replied the pedlar; ‘for I can prove that you invited me to eat, drink, and lodge with you, and took care of my horse, all of your own accord; and therefore it is as contrary to law as it is to good manners to charge me with that-are bill. Besides, friend deacon, I could not think of allowing you to sully your hospitality by taking my money. And as to the warrant for travelling on Sunday, that matter is already settled—for I called upon the ’Squire before breakfast, complained of myself, and saved half the fine, as you will see by this little bit of a document here’—taking a slip of paper from his pocket-book—‘and therefore, deacon, once more thanking you for my entertainment, I bid you a very good morning.’

The tything-man stood aghast, and the pedlar drove on, very well satisfied with the result of his arrest, by which, he declared, after deducting the expense of his fine, he had cleared thirteen shillings and six-pence, Yankee currency, considering the extra provisions that he and his horse had so bountifully stowed away.

A Personal Insult.—At a row which took place in a northern city some time ago, while brick-bats and clubs were flying about in every direction, and the doughty combatants panting for glory, a negro was laid level with the earth by one of the opposite party. Raising his voice above the din of battle he demanded a parley, at the same time saying—‘What gemplin trow dat last brick? Some one trow him—and if he only say who he was, I wont expose him!’

A MILITIA CAPTAIN.

A captain of militia, in one of the up-river towns, was in the habit of swearing ‘by forty.’ He had, like many other officers who command ‘slab’ companies, a troublesome set of fellows to deal with.

One training day, when the soldiers behaved as usual, very disorderly, he drew his sword, and furiously brandishing it in the air, exclaimed—'Fellow sogers, I swear by forty, if you dont behave better, I'll put every devil of you under 'rest!'

'I wish you would give us a leetle rest,' said half a dozen voices, 'for we're e'en-a-most tired to death.'

'Order! order! fellow sogers,' roared the captain with another tremendous flourish of the sword. The word was no sooner spoken than they all came to an order, bring down the breaches of their guns with all violence, each upon his neighbour's toes—which threw the ranks into greater disorder than before.

'Dress! dress!' bawled the captain.

'We are dressed, most on us,' replied a fellow, who was barefoot, and had on a rimless hat.

'Now, by forty,' said the captain, 'that's a tarnal lie; you aint above half dressed, if that's what you mean—but I mean something else—I mean you should dress in the military sense of the word.'

'How's that, captain?' cried half a dozen voices.

'How's that! you fools you,' exclaimed the captain, 'by forty, have you been so long under my training and don't know the meaning of dress? Form a straight line! I say—form a straight line!'

The soldiers made sundry ineffectual efforts to get into a right line, and the captain began to despair of ever straightening them, when his military genius (that, which ever most distinguishes a great commander in emergencies,) suddenly suggested the novel expedient of backing his men up against a neighbouring fence, which fortunately happened to be straight.

'Tention! fellow sogers,' said he, in a stentorian voice, 'Advance backwards! Music, quick step!'

The soldiers made a quick retrograde movement, and came with their backs plump against the fence.

'There! by forty,' said the captain, 'now see if you can keep straight.' But he had scarcely performed this successful manœuvre, and was about to resume the manual exercise, when the clouds began to threaten rain; and the soldiers, squinting at the aspect of the heavens commenced deserting their ranks and moving in all haste towards a neighbouring tavern.

'Halt! halt!' roared the captain—'halt! I say fellow sogers; where the devil are you going to?'

'We're goin' to get out of the rain.'

'Out of the rain! you cowards! Halt! I say, or I'll stick the first man I can catch.'

'I'll take care you sha'nt catch me,' shouted each one, as he took to his heels. In less than a minute the whole company had deserted; and the captain, whose motions were much retarded by his regimentfals, had little chance of sticking them, for the very sufficient reason that he could not overtake them.

'By forty!' said he, after standing two or three minutes in speechless astonishment, 'if this don't beat all the military movements I ever heard of! Just as I'd got them into a straight line by a new manœuvre—to desert me thus! But there's no use in keeping the field alone; I may as well go to the tavern too.' So saying, he sheathed his sword, and followed his warriors.

Making Money Rapidly.—'I have made one thousand-dollar this morning, before breakfast,' said a Frenchman who kept a retail shop in Boston.

'A thousand dollars before breakfast!' said a neighbour, with a dubious air.

'Oui—yes sare,' replied the Frenchman, rubbing his hands with great glee—'I have clear one thousand dollar clear.'

'You've sold all your goods then.'

'O non! Sare, I have not sold one good—I have all de good in my shop.'

'How did you clear so much money then?'

'I have mark de good all up.'

'Marked them all up!'

'Oui, Monsieur, I have put on de high price, so as make clear one thousand dollar, and keep all my good in my shop.'

A MISTAKE.

A boy at school, a dull one we must own,

Who, though not learned, yet was very bold;

Whilst reading o'er in monotonous tone

Came to 'hard words,' then waited to be told:

The teacher said at length, who had him heard,

'Read,—Shadrac, Meshack, and Abednego;'

The lad, not catching rightly still the words,

Cries 'take him, shake him, and away we go!'

Beautiful Extract.—It cannot be that earth is man's only abiding place. It cannot be that any life is a bubble, cast up by the ocean of eternity, to float a moment upon its waves, and sink into nothingness. Else, why is it, the high and glorious aspirations, which leap like angels from the temple of our hearts, are forever wandering about unsatisfied? Why is it that the rainbow and the cloud come over us with a beauty that is not of earth, and then pass off and leave us to muse on their faded loveliness? Why is it that the stars which 'hold their festival around the midnight throne,' are set above the grasp of our limited faculties: forever mocking us with their unapproachable glory? And finally, why is it that bright forms of human beauty are presented to our view and then taken from us; leaving the thousand steams of our affections to flow back in an Alpine torrent upon our hearts? We are born for a higher destiny than that of earth. There is a realm where the rainbow never fades—where the stars will be spread out before us like the islands that slumber on the ocean, and where the beautiful beings which pass before us like shadows, will stay in our presence forever.

COLD WINTER IS COMING.

Cold Winter is coming—take care of your toes,
Gay zephyr has folded his fan.
His lances are couched in the ice-wind that blows,
So mail up as warm as you can.

Cold Winter is coming—he's ready to start
From his home on the mountains afar;
He is shrunken and pale—he looks froze to the heart,
And snow-wreaths embellish his car.

Cold Winter is coming—Hark! did ye not hear
The blast which his herald has blown?
The children of Nature all trembled in fear,
For to them is his power made known.

Cold Winter is coming—there breathes not a flower,
Though sometimes the day may pass fair;
The lute is remov'd from the lady's lorn bower,
Lest it coldly be touch'd by the air.

Cold Winter is coming—all stript are the groves,
The passage bird hastens away;
To the lovely blue south, like a tourist he roves,
And returns like the sunshine in May.

Cold Winter is coming—he'll breathe on the stream,
And the bane of his petrific breath
Will seal up the waters, till, in the moonbeam,
They lie stirless, as slumber or death!

Cold Winter is coming—and soon shall we see,
On the panes, by that genius, Jack Frost,
Fine drawings of mountain, stream, tower and tree—
Framed and glazed too without any cost.

Cold Winter is coming—ye delicate fair,
Take care, when your hyson you sip;
Drink it quick, and don't talk, lest he come unaware,
And turn it to ice on your lip!

Cold Winter is coming—I charge you again—
Muffle warm—of the tyrant beware—
He's so brave, that to strike the young hero he's fain,
He's so cold, he'll not favour the fair.

Cold Winter is coming—I've said so before,
It seems I've not much else to say:
Yes, Winter is coming—and God help the poor!
I wish it was going away.

Presence of Mind.—When Lee, the poet, was confined in Bedlam, a friend went to visit him, and finding that he could converse reasonably, for a poet imagined that he was cured of his madness. Lee offered to show him Bedlam. They went through this melancholy medical prison, the poet moralizing very philosophically all the while. At last, they ascended the top of the building; and as they were both looking down from the perilous height, Lee took his friend by the arm and exclaimed, 'Let us take this leap, and immortalize ourselves this instant.' The other, knowing that force would not avail to turn him from his purpose, coolly said, 'Pshaw, any man could jump down, we should not immortalize ourselves that way. Let us go down, and try if we can jump up again.' The madman, struck with the idea, willingly descended, and his friend was saved.

MAXIMS FOR MARRIED LADIES.—The following maxims, if pursued, will not only make the men in love with marriage, but cause them to make good husbands:—The first is to be good yourself. To avoid all thoughts of managing a husband. Never try to deceive or impose on his understanding, nor give him uneasiness; but treat him with affection, sincerity, and respect. Remember that husbands, at best, are only men, subject like yourselves to error and frailty. Be not too sanguine, then, before marriage, or promise yourselves happiness without alloy. Should you discover any thing in his humour or behaviour not altogether what you expected or wish, pass it over, smooth your own temper, and try to mend his, by attention, cheerfulness, and good nature. Never reproach him with misfortunes, which are the accidents and infirmities of life—a burden which each has engaged to assist the other in supporting, and to which both parties are equally exposed—but instead of murmuring and reflections, divide the sorrows between you; make the best of it, and it will be easier to both. It is the innate office of the softer sex to soothe the troubles of the other. Resolve every morning to be cheerful all day, and should any thing occur to break your resolution, suffer it not to put you out of temper with your husband. Dispute not with him, be the occasion what it may; but much sooner deny yourself the trifle of having your own will, or gaining the better of an argument, than risk a quarrel, or create a heart-burning which it is impossible to see the end of. Implicit submission in a man to his wife, is ever disgraceful to both; but implicit submission in the wife, is what she promised at the altar, what the good will revere her for, and what is, in fact, the greatest honour she can receive.

Be assured, a woman's power, as well as her happiness, has no other foundation than her husband's esteem and love, which it is her interest, by all possible means, to preserve and increase. Study, therefore, his temper, and command your own. Enjoy him with satisfaction, share and soothe his cares, and with the utmost assiduity conceal his infirmities.

The reader will perceive that the following poem is built on the text prefixed, and that the first line of each Stanza, is borrowed from it.

*Behold, alas! our days we spend!
How vain they be, how soon they end!*

BEHOLD

How short a span
Was long enough of old
To measure out the life of man:
In those well temper'd days, his time was then
Survey'd, cast up, and found but three-score years and ten.

ALAS!

And what is that;
They come, and slide and pass,
Before my pen can tell thee what,
The posts of time are swift, which having run
Their seven short stages o'er, their short-lived task is done.

OUR DAYS

Begun, we lend
To sleep, to antick plays
And toys until the first stage end;
Twelve waning moons twice five times told, we give
To unrecover'd loss; we rather breathe than live.

WE SPEND

A ten year's breath,
Before we apprehend
What 'tis to live, or fear a death;
For childish dreams are fill'd with painted toys
Which please our sense awhile, and waking prove but toys!

HOW VAIN,

How wretched is
Poor man that doth remain
A slave to such a state as this;
His days are short at longest; few at most;
They are but hard at best; yet lavish'd out or lost.

THEY BE

The secret springs
That make our minutes flee
On wheels more swift than eagles' wings!
Our life's a clock, and every gasp of breath
Breathes forth a warning grief, till time shall strike a death!

HOW SOON

Our new-born light
Attains to full-aged noon!
And this, how soon to grey-haired night!
We spring, we bud, we blossom, and we blast,
Ere we can count our days, our days they flee so fast.

THEY END

When scarce begun:
And ere we apprehend
That we begin to live, our life is done:
Man, count thy days: and if they fly too fast
For thy dull thoughts to count, count every day the last.

A Clergyman took for his text the following words,—‘Vow, and pay unto the Lord thy vows.’ An Indian heard him very attentively, and stepping up to the parson, thus accosted him, ‘I vow I’ll go home with you, Mr. Minister.’ ‘You must go then,’ replied the parson. The Indian afterward vowed to have supper, and then to stay all night. ‘You may,’ replied the clergyman, ‘but I vow you shall go in the morning.’

Digging out a Hole.—‘An’ so ye ar’ digging out the hole there Pat, ar’ ye?’ said one Irishman to another engaged in making a hole to insert a post. ‘No, faith, it’s not the hole that I’m after digging out—for I’m digging the dirt out and leaving the hole here.’

GOSLINGS IN THE SPRING.

A citizen bargaining with a countryman for a brace of dead geese, inquired if they were young and tender.

'Why, as to that matter,' said the countryman, 'they were goslings in the spring.'

'Then they must be very delicate,' returned the citizen. 'For my part I hate a tough goose. But there's a good deal of deception in these things. You seem, however, to be an honest fellow; and I suppose I may rely upon your word. You are positive they were goslings in the spring, are you?'

'Positive! Why, I'm mortally sartin of it. I wouldn't tell you any thing whatsoever that isn't true—no, sir, I'm none of them are chaps.'

'If you deceive me now—'

'I'd as soon deceive my grandmother, that's now dead and gone, every bit and grain.'

The citizen paid the money for his spring goslings, took them home, and had them cooked. But, heavens and earth! when he undertook to carve them, he found the joints so firmly knit together that it required half an hour each to separate them. He worked, and fumed, and fretted; hacked, and ripped and swore; upset the gravy, spattered all the company with grease and bedaubed himself to the elbows. And after all his labour the goslings were found to be nearly uneatable.

This was a most mortifying case, both because the citizen had been grossly deceived, and because his ignorance of the marks of anserine youth and tenderness had exposed him to the merriment of his friends and guests. He swore revenge, if he should ever lay his hands on the countryman. 'What!' exclaimed he—'a good-for-nothing country bumpkin, to cheat me, one of the first merchants on 'change, and the best judge of English goods in the whole city! I'll not endure it, by heavens. I'll make the rascal sweat for it, if ever I catch him.'

This opportunity was not long wanting; for one day, as he was scouring the market in quest of more poultry, he came plump upon his man. He made no bones, but forthwith seizing him by the collar, he exclaimed—Ah! 'I've caught you, have I, my sweet fellow?'

'I rather think so,' said the countryman, with great simplicity of manner—'but you needn't a took that trouble, for I'm not so wild as to run away.'

'I dont intend you shall run away. I'll put you where the dogs wont find you. What the deuce did you mean by cheating me so about those goslings, ha?'

'What goslings?' with an air of well-feigned surprise.

'What goslings! Why, those you sold me just before Christmas.'

'Just before Christmas! Let me see—I sold a number of pair of the goose-kind about that time; but I dont seem to recollect the particular ones I sold to you.'

'Dont seem to recollect! I'll refresh your memory, sir. You must go with me to the bar of a magistrate.'

'It would be a great deal more refreshing to go to the bar of a tavern. If there's any misunderstanding betwixt us, I'd rather settle it in a friendly way over a glass of grog than to have any lawsuit about it. Suppose we just step over the way and leave the matter to the landlord. If it shall appear that I told you any thing more than the truth, about the goslings, which you say I sold you, I'll give you two brace more.'

'Confound them! I've had enough already. I hav'nt yet digested those you sold me before.'

'Well then, I'll pay you the price of two pair; but if it turns out that I told you nothing more than the raal truth, you shall treat me and all the company present, to as much as we can drink.'

The citizen agreed to this, and they went into the nearest house where good liquors were to be had. The matter was stated to mine host, and the aggrieved purchaser told his story. 'This fellow,' said he, 'just before Christmas sold me a pair of geese, which he assured me were goslings in the spring—is it not so, sir?' turning to the countryman.

'May be it is. But what of that?'

'You acknowledge it then, do you—you rascal!'

'I acknowledge that I sold a pair of goose-kind to a gentleman that looked like you; and I recollect very well telling him they were goslings in the spring. But what of that?'

'What of that! You'll find out presently.' Then turning to mine host, he said—'Well, Mr. Landlord, I carried home the goslings, and they turned out to be forty years old.'

'That's true!' exclaimed the countryman, slapping his hand on the counter—'that's true to a hair.'

'You acknowledge it, do you? What unblushing impudence!'

'It's the honest truth, for all that.'

'Did'nt you declare to me that they were goslings in the spring?'

'O yes, to be sure I did—and I had very good reason to be satisfied they were goslings in the spring; for my dear good old mother, that never told a lie in her life, made me a present of them the day I was married; and she told me a thousand times they were hatched the very day I was born—and that was forty years ago last April.'

'Oh, you scoundrel!' exclaimed the citizen, with a shake of the head and a laugh out of the wrong side of his mouth.—'I thought I was a match for any two countrymen in the way of a bargain—but you've got beyond me. Here, landlord, give these folks whatever they want to drink. As for myself, I'll take the strongest you've got, by way of improving my wits; for if I had'nt been a goose all my days, I never should have been taken in by the goslings in the spring.'

THE IRISH FISHERMAN.

An Irishman angling one day up the Liffy,
Which runs down by Dublin's sweet city so fine,
A smart shower of rain falling, Pat in a jiffy
Crept under the arch of a bridge with his line.
'Why that's not the way to accomplish your wishes,' Cries Dermont, 'there, never a bite will you get.'
'Och, brother,' says Pat, 'don't you know that the fishes
Will flock under here to keep out of the wet.'

Au Account of a Wonderful Ghost.—The late Dr. Fowler, bishop of Gloucester, and Justice Powell had frequent altercations on the subject of ghosts. The bishop was a zealous defender of the reality of them; the justice was somewhat sceptical. The bishop one day met his friend, and the justice told him that since their last conference on the subject, he had had ocular demonstration, which had convinced him of the existence of ghosts. 'I rejoice at your conversion,' replied the bishop; 'give me the circumstance which produced it, with all the particulars. Ocular demonstration, you say?' 'Yes, my lord; as I lay last night in my bed, about the twelfth hour I was awakened by an uncommon noise, and heard something coming up stairs!'—'Go on, sir.' 'Fearfully alarmed at the noise, I drew my curtain.—' 'Proceed.' 'And saw a faint glimmering light enter my chamber.' 'Of a pale blue colour was it not?' interrogated the doctor. 'Of a pale blue! and this pale blue light was followed by a tall, meagre, stern figure, who appeared as an old man of seventy years of age, arrayed in a long light-coloured rug gown, bound with a leathern girdle: his beard thick and grizzly; his hair scant and straight; his face of a dark sable hue; upon his head a large fur cap; and in his hand a long staff. Terror seized my whole frame. I trembled till the bed verily shook, and cold drops hung upon every limb. The figure advanced with a slow and solemn step.' 'Did you not speak to it? there was money hid, or murder committed; without doubt,' said the bishop. 'My lord, I did speak to it, I abjured it by all that was holy to tell me whence, and for what purpose he thus appeared.' 'And in Heaven's name what was the reply?' 'Before he deigned to speak, he lifted up his staff three several times, my lord, and smote the floor, even so loudly that verily the strokes caused the room to reverberate the thundering sound. He then waved the pale blue light which he bore in what is called a lantern, he waved it even to my eyes; and he told me, my lord, he told me that he was, yes, my lord, that he was, not more nor less than—the watchman! who had come to give me notice that my street door was open, and that, unless I rose and shut it, I might be robbed before morning.’ The justice had no sooner concluded, than the bishop disappeared.

Judgment.—‘Silence! keep silence in the court!’ said an angry judge one day. ‘Why will you not keep silence?—Here we have judged a dozen causes this morning, and have not heard a word of one of them.’
