United States Marine Corps, Sergeant Major Bryan B. Battaglia is use to walking down hallways to meet people. On Monday, the Senior Enlisted Advisor to the Chairman (SEAC) of the Joint Chiefs of Staff swapped the rings of the Pentagon for the wings of the Veterans Memorial Home in Paramus.

Battaglia stopped at the skilled nursing facility the day before military appreciation activities at The Barclays PGA golf tournament, also in Paramus.

"I am fortunate and grateful to spend time with them," said Battaglia, who serves as a principal military advisor to the Chairman and the Secretary of Defense. "They are truly, why we have a free country."

The top non-commissioned officer in the U.S. armed forces shook hands with residents throughout his tour of the 300-bed home that included calling out numbers during their bingo game.

"It just goes to show how close knit a brother and sister-hood this facility brings to its veterans," said Battaglia.

Members of the veterans' home advisory board and other veteran service organization leaders greeted the SEAC, explaining how donations of time and money make the facility better for their fellow veterans.

"It is community; these veterans come together from all branches of the service and they spend time with one another and that is the beauty of our armed forces," said Battaglia. "No other profession in the world does that."

Battaglia called the residents the "Heroes of our nation" and the visit allowed him to see firsthand what states are doing to ensure health care for veterans.

"Continued health coverage for all of our comrades, those who have fought for our country, is why I am here," said Battaglia.

CELL PHONE PHOTO STANDS CAPTURE EVOLVING SHORELINE

By 1st Lt. Amelia Thatcher, 444th Mobile Public Affairs Detachment

Sea Girt's beach walkers, treasure hunters and seashell collectors might notice something new on their daily stroll.

Placed on the shore near the National Guard Training Center, three green and brown Fluker Posts wait for people to prop up their camera phones and take snapshots of the sunrise, the birds, and the ocean.

"We can use the photos to manage the land," said New Jersey Department of Military and Veterans Affairs environmental specialist Bill McBride.

Developed in 2008 by Dr. Martin Fluker of Victoria University in Brisbane, Australia, the fixed points enable passers-by to take landscape photos with their own camera phones. Signage on the posts encourages people to send the photos to Fluker's online collection point, and track changes to the local landscape over time.

McBride spotted Fluker's idea and immediately thought of importing it to the Jersey shore.

"Sea Girt is unique as it has the recreational element... we do active land management and people go there regularly," he said. "If you have years and years of photos, you can measure plant density and beach erosion."

Fluker's original design can be found all around Melbourne, in southern Australia. Photos from the older posts document the visible effects of erosion and human activity over the last half decade.

The DMAVA environmental team modified their posts to ensure each photo, taken by different types of camera phones, would capture the same angle of Sea Girt's coastline.

"You could put a time-lapse camera there, but you have to get people involved," said Chuck Appleby, chief of the DMAVA environmental branch.

He added that aerial photos, such as Google Earth views, aren't nearly as frequent as a user-driven concept like the Fluker post.

"People walk the beach every day," Appleby said. "You could get just one photo a week."

McBride hopes to use the Fluker photos to track endangered sea bird population, plant growth, and beach erosion. The team avoided setting up posts in more secluded areas, as much of the beachfront is in its natural state: prime habitat for animal species, according to Appleby.

"You need people and a reason to study. Outreach is important," Appleby said.

"We can show that the Guard supports more here at Sea Girt," McBride added.

And that's no f uke.

Energy Conservation Tip of the Week

Fix any water leaks that you may have in your home or office. While it may not seem like a leak is much of a problem, a faucet that only leaks a drip every 4 seconds will waste 65 gallons in a month and more than 780 gallon in a year!

Did You Know?

The average person uses between 80 and 100 gallons of water every day. The majority of this use comes from flushing toilets. The next comes from showers and baths.

If you would like more information about our energy and water conservation efforts, please contact Christopher Moore, energy manager at christopher.moore@dmava.nj.gov.

Vets visit New Jersey

Residents at Veteran's Haven South in Winslow visited the Battleship New Jersey on the Camden, N.J., waterfront July 19, 2014. Battleship volunteer guides Dave Dimarzio, Angelo Pazzuello and Charles Vaughan escorted the group through the 12 sections of the ship. The highlights were the war room, the turrets, Tomahawk missile system, combat information center and the operation specialist room. For the Air Force and Army veterans, it was a learning experience. For the Navy veterans, it brought back some familiar memories.
