A N E C D O T E.

PHILIP II. of Spain had sent the constable of Castille to Rome, to pay obedience to the new Pope, whose ambition and secret Designs gave Spain uneasiness. SIXTUS, struck with the youth of the ambassador, thought that the king designed to insult him. "What," said his holiness to the constable, "is your master, the sovereign of so many states, in want of subjects, that he sends me an ambassador without a beard." "Holy father," replied the Spaniard, "had my master known that merit consisted in a beard, he would have sent you a he-goat, and not a gentleman like me."

Say, whither so fast do ye fly?

If the lesson you told me was truth,

Those streams, with such fondness survey'd,

Have hid all their sweetness from me.

IT is in a republican government that the whole power of education is required. The fear of despotic governments rises naturally of itself amidst threats and punishments; the honour of monarchies is favoured by the passions, and favours them in its turn: but virtue is a self-renunciation which is always arduous and painful.

This virtue may be defined, the love of the laws and of our country. As this love requires a constant preference of publick to private interest, it is the source of all the particular virtues; for they are nothing more than this very preference itself.

This love is peculiar to democracies. In these alone the government is intrusted to private citizens. Now government is like every thing else: to preserve it, we must love it.

Has it ever been heard that kings were not fond of monarchy, or that despotic princes hated arbitrary power?

Every thing therefore depends on establishing this love in a republic, and to inspire it, it ought to be the principal principal business of education: but the surest way of instilling it into children, is for parents to set them an example.

People have it generally in their power to communicate their ideas to their children; but they are still better able to transfuse their passions.

If it happens otherwise, it is because the impressions made at home are effaced by those they have received abroad.

It is not the young people that degenerate: they are not spoiled till those of maturer age are already sunk into corruption.

[Montesquieu.]

DETACHED THOUGHTS on various Subjects.

I.

THE gradual unfolding of the human mind while in a state of childhood, is similar to that of a plant expanding into maturity. The plant is liable to make too rapid a progress under the influence of an unclouded sun; or to be nipped in its growth.

Note, Venus will be Evening Star from the 4th of January till the 21st of October, and then Morning Star to the End of the Year.

MARCH. THE THIRD MONTH.

That valley, whose mantle so gay,
 Is with primrose and cowslip o'erspread;
 No longer invites me to stray,
 And rife the sweets of their bed,
 Not odious at present they look;
 I discern that their colours are bright;
 But their charms have my fancy forfook,
 And their fragrance forgot to delight.

 The soothing complaint of the dove !
 I have left my companions to hear
 The wood-linnet warble her love.
 Nor these can my footsteps retard ;
 Or if round me they carelessly fly,
 From mine eyes they attract no regard,
 And mine ears their soft warblings deny.

IV.

Charity, considered as a principle of benevolence, is the most noble of any that can actuate the human heart. It excites to every action that can possibly conduce to the happiness of mankind. It is the genuine offspring of the Deity, the sacred cement which unites together the whole family of God both in heaven and earth. It is charity that connects in an holy relation the highest seraph that inhabits immortality to the pen- sive inhabitant of an earthly region. It springs from God, and attracts all his intelligent creation to himself.

V.

Fear, in imperfect beings, produces, in a degree, the same effects as love in the most perfect. It is a centinel placed on the bulwarks of nature to give notice of every approaching evil. The prudent use of it preserves the order of the universe, and produces safety and happiness to all ranks of beings.

VI.

The kindnesses men receive from others, are like traces drawn in the sand. The breath of every passion sweeps them away, and they are re- membered

MAY. The FIFTH MONTH.

Ah! sure 'tis the business of life,
 That bids those endearments depart ;
 To involve us in cares and in strife,
 That estrange and entangle the heart.
 With destiny all must comply ;
 Yet cannot my fancy but mourn,
 For the season that fades from my eye,
 And the sweets that must never return.

THE HAPPY LIFE.

Who envies none, whom chance doth raise,
 Or vice; who never understood
 How deepest wounds are giv'n with praise,
 Nor rules of state, but rules of good.
 Who God doth late and early pray
 More of his grace, than gifts, to lend;
 And entertains the harmless day

XVII.

A new sentiment is to the mind what a new dish is to the palate. We relish them with eagerness; and are often apt to value them more for their novelty than use.

XVIII.

The organs of the body are the inlets to sensation; and as these are more or less perfect, our ideas are more or less agreeable to the truth of things. Doubtless when the soul is stript of its organs, and beholds in open vision the immaterial world its perceptions will as far surpass those in its present state, as those of an idiot now are to the greatest philosopher.

XIX.

Prayer is the going forth of the mind in the desire after some good not in its possession. Praise is the overflowing of gratitude in the soul from the sensation of present enjoyment, and the hope of its continuance. It is a duty arising from the creature to the Creator for blessings enjoyed. Prayer is likewise a duty proper to be exercised for the continuance

SEPTEMBER. The NINTH MONTH.

This man is freed from fervile bands,
 · Of hope to raise, or fear to fall;
 Lord of himself, though not of lands,
 And having nothing, yet hath all.

ODE TO INCLINATION.

WHERE'ER thy impulse, goddess, beams,
 In smiles of transport drest,
 O guard us from those dread extremes
 Which tear the human breast.

tinuance of present, or addition of future good. The end of its institution is to keep the mind in a state of humble dependence on the source of its mercies, and stedfast looking up to him for the renewal of them.

XX.

It is the perfection of wisdom to steer in the middle path between bigotry and libertinism in sentiment. The latter is too often productive of licentiousness in conduct; but the former excludes that charity which the apostle has declared to be the greatest of all Christian virtues.

XXI.

Without speculation there will be little right action; but if action is not the consequence, speculation will be vain. Life is short and uncertain: the business of it is great and important.

EUSEBIUS.

On AMBITION.

IT is natural for great souls to be animated with the desire of enrolling their names in the annals of immortality, that their names may, after their short human transit, still gather laurels, and be the object of admiration

OCTOBER. The TENTH MONTH.

From error still to mark our way,
 O point where wisdom runs,
 White as the moon's meridian ray
 Yet vigorous as the sun's.
 Her cautious torch shall safely lead
 Where young desire should tend,
 And look with scorn on every deed,
 But what she can defend.

 There rest secure; and what thy laws dictate
 May I observe, and ever keep in view,

 Thy gentle mandate shall command its peace,
 When VIRTUE bids the jarring passions cease.
