in urban terrain facility at Joint Base McGuire-Dix-Lakehurst, N.J., Sept. 14, 2014.

During the September drill, members from the 108th Security Forces Squadron found themselves in the field conducting an exercise called the Sadler Cup, which comprised of scenarios designed to emphasize real world skills.

“The main goals of this exercise is to focus on air base ground defense while building comradery and bringing leadership experience to different individuals within our unit,” said Capt. Alvin

Airman 1st Class Kristina Rodriguez, 108th Security Forces Squadron, writes notes on a map in preparation for scenario based training.

Mallette, 108th Security Forces executive officer.

In addition to working on morale and leadership training, there were other reasons for this training to take place.

“The teams will be working on land navigation, squad maneuvering tactics and weapons proficiency while working within the scenarios put forth in this exercise,” said Senior Master Sgt. Michael Rakauckas, 108th Security Forces operations superintendent. “These skills are needed for when we deploy and these scenarios aim to reinforce that.”

Both scenarios made use of the Joint Base’s military operations in urban terrain facility. The SF Airmen dealt with clearing rooms and dealing with stairways where the opposing forces had the upper hand.

There were two teams working two different scenarios encompassing all of these skills. The first scenario dealt with rebel forces that have moved into a MOUT facility called Chango Village and were attempting to take it over. Recent intelligence indicated that they had in their possession a surface-to-air-missile and that they planned to shoot down an aircraft with it. The team’s challenge was to locate the rebels and the SAM and secure the village.

“The goal of this first scenario is to get the team working on communication, tactical deployment of the team itself and ultimately, mission success,” said Rakauckas.

While the first team was navigating through the village scenario, the second team was negotiating another challenge of its own.

The second team dealt with the rescue of a downed pilot in a hostile area. The mission was to deter, detect and neutralize the rebel forces in the area and locate the downed pilot before he was captured. To add to the real world urgency, the pilot had vital recon data on him that needed to be collected.

The mission’s success was defined by the learning opportunities and refresher training that the exercise provided, given that the majority of the skills being put on display are not regularly used by some of the junior members.

“This is my first exercise with the unit and I’m looking forward to the challenge,” said Airman 1st Class Jonathon Bustios. “This is giving me a great opportunity to work on my land navigation and rear security skills.”

At the same time, Security Forces members observed and evaluated the teams to determine which skills needed additional training.

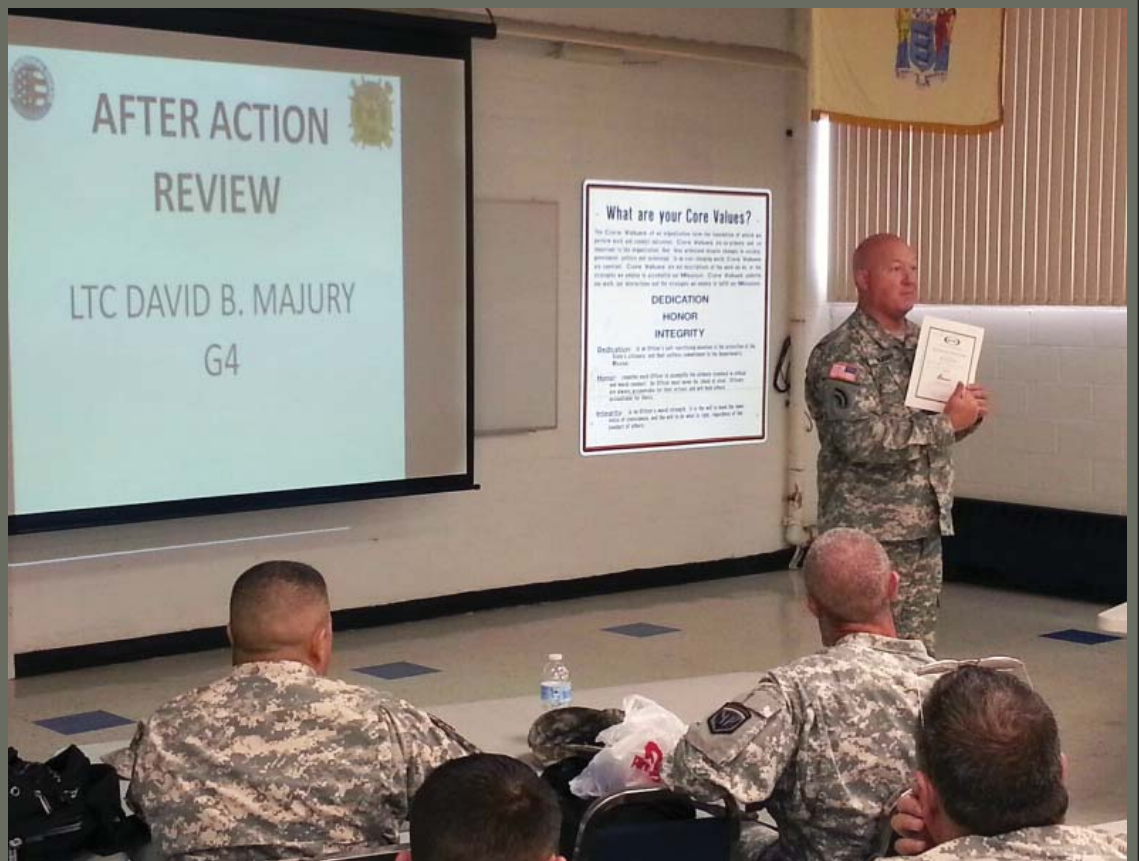

“Communication between team members is paramount, especially when working in these types of high stress environments,” said Mallette. “Along with practicing these necessary skills of the trade, the experience gained from a training exercise such as this will benefit our unit when we deploy, which is really the ultimate goal.”

ENERGY CONSERVATION TIP OF THE WEEK

A green roof has many benefits including the ability to filter rain water, reduce the air conditioning load in a building, increase building value, improve air quality, increase the life of a roof, reduce noise and increase biodiversity.

Did You Know?

A green roof is a roof of a building that is covered with vegetation on top of a waterproof membrane. There are two main types: Intensive and extensive. An extensive green roof is cheaper, but does not support much weight. An intensive green roof is more expensive, but will support a larger weight such as trees and people.

If you would like more information about our energy and water conservation efforts, please contact Christopher Moore, Energy Manager at christopher.moore@dmava.nj.gov.
