Trenton, NJ – Governor Chris Christie and First Lady Mary Pat Christie issued the following statement marking the 4th anniversary of Superstorm Sandy:

"Four years ago today, the State of New Jersey was ravaged by the second greatest national disaster in U.S. history. Superstorm Sandy destroyed our homes, communities, and businesses, and left in its wake a deep sense of despair among all New Jerseyans. After Sandy, sorrow did not replace resilience and in typical New Jersey fashion we rolled up our sleeves, and responded with strength. Through the amazing generosity and extraordinary spirit of the people of this state and the many thousands of people who traveled here to support the recovery effort, we were able to rebuild, recover, and revitalize what had so quickly been taken away from us.

"As we reflect on this day let's not forget that the job is still not complete and will not be complete until every person is back in their home, all businesses are rebuilt, and all of our citizens feel their lives are back to normal. We have and will continue to work tirelessly to achieve this goal and fully restore our great state.

"So, on behalf of our entire family, we wish everyone a safe, quiet, and peaceful day. That's a great gift given what we know this day has wrought before."
