AN ASSEMBLY SELECT COMMITTEE ON BALLOT DESIGN RESOLUTION organizing the committee and authorizing the issuance of communications by the committee requesting information from and attendance by persons regarding election ballot design and relevant documents as may be necessary to further the committee's research on all aspects of the design of primary election and general election ballots which may be utilized in the conduct of elections in this State.

WHEREAS, On October 28, 2024, pursuant to Assembly Resolution No. 167, the General Assembly constituted the Assembly Select Committee on Ballot Design as a select committee; and

WHEREAS, The committee is directed to review and consider any studies, court decisions, best practices, and any other relevant research, information, guidance, and expertise regarding the design of primary election and general election ballots which may be utilized in the conduct of elections in this State; now, therefore,

Be It Resolved by the Assembly Select Committee on Ballot Design:

1. a. The committee authorizes its Co-Chairs, Benjie E. Wimberly and Al Barlas, to jointly issue communications under their signature to request relevant documents and other information, and to request the attendance and testimony before the committee of any individuals with expertise relevant to the committee's research.

b. In the event that the Co-Chairs are unable to fulfill their duties as Co-Chairs, the committee authorizes its Co-Vice Chairs, Verlina Reynolds-Jackson and Brian E. Rumpf, to act as Co-Chairs.

c. The committee may meet at the call of the Co-Chairs at the times and in the places the Co-Chairs may deem appropriate and necessary to fulfill the committee's duties.

d. A majority of the authorized membership of the committee shall constitute a quorum for the transaction of business.

2. To aid the committee in carrying out its duties, and at the direction of the Co-Chairs, the committee is authorized to:

a. engage the assistance of the Office of Legislative Services, who shall be designated as Secretary of the committee;

b. with the approval of the Speaker of the General Assembly, engage any outside resources or services as it may require and as may be available to it for its purposes;

c. incur traveling and other miscellaneous expenses necessary to perform its duties, within the limits of funds appropriated or otherwise made available to it for its purposes; and

d. agree to conditions on information gathering as necessary and appropriate.

3. A copy of this resolution shall be delivered to the Clerk of the General Assembly.

Testimony to the New Jersey Assembly Select Committee on Ballot Design

Wendy Underhill, Director of Elections & Redistricting, NCSL

October 29, 2024

Thank you, Chairman Winberry, Chairman Barles, and members of the committee for inviting me here today.

I am Wendy Underhill, the director of elections and redistricting at the National Conference of State Legislatures. I expect you all know what NCSL is, but we are required to say that NCSL is the nation's bipartisan organization supporting the work of legislators in the states and territories, and all legislative staff as well.

NCSL does not take positions at any point on any issues that come before legislatures. Instead, we focus on providing accurate, comparative information so that you—who are elected to make decisions—have what you need to do your jobs well.

Please know that NCSL's bread-and-butter is assisting you and your staff with thorny questions on any topic. Just ask—we handle all inquiries confidentially. You can come to me, or try Austin Reid, NCSL's state liaison to New Jersey.

The question you have invited me to discuss today is ballot design, especially in light of the Kim v. Henton case decided last spring. I know that you will hear from county clerks and election administrators today as well. That's great, because they know how things work in New Jersey. What I can offer is a scan of the nation from a bird's eye view.

My plan for the next ten minutes or so is to first address New Jersey's traditional ballot design compared to what is known as "office block" ballot design; then address other ways parties and states can support voters through nominating processes and ballot design; and I'll end with a list of policy questions for your consideration.

If that works for you, then I'll take questions at the end?

With that, I'll start with setting the stage on the big question: how ballots are laid out.

By far, around the nation most states use ballots that follow "office block" design. On an "office block" ballot, the name of an office and all the candidates running for it are listed together.

"By far" doesn't in any way suggest that an office block is the best option, just that it is the most common. The system New Jersey has favored, which I will refer to as "rows and columns," is less common. In fact, if I were speaking in any other state, I would probably describe how your ballots work, but you already know how they work! Some call your style a "full face" ballot, because every race and every candidate is on the same large surface.

In addition to New Jersey, at least some counties, if not all, in Pennsylvania, Connecticut, Delaware and New York also use rows and columns. In some cases, like Connecticut, the parties are listed down the first column and the offices are listed across the first row. In others, it can be the reverse, with the offices down the first column and the parties across the first row.

My point is that there is more than one way to design a ballot and still give voters an easy way to select the candidates they prefer, systems that leading to winners and losers based on the voters' choices.

Kim v Hanton addressed specifically the "county line" included on New Jersey's primary ballots, which indicates the candidates preferred by the local party. Where I vote, in Colorado, a party can send a mailing to their local supporters indicating the party's preferred candidates. It's like providing a cheat sheet for the voter to use.

On the ballots themselves, states vary on several issues.

For instance, on "office block" ballots, state law dictates which candidate gets the first place on the ballot. Ballot order matters because being listed first has been shown to provide an advantage. On general election ballots, the most common way to order candidates for any given office is to give the candidate representing the party that received the most votes for governor in the most recent election the first slot, and the candidates from the party that received the second most votes the second spot, and so on. This method benefits the majority party, and it is standard procedure in many places.

In an effort to not give a preference, some states order candidates based on the alphabet: California and Utah even randomize the alphabet so as to not give a leg up to candidates with A and B names. Other states use ballot rotation, where some ballots are printed with each of the candidates in the top, and preferred, spot, so that overall no candidate has an advantage.

I'd like to also comment on how primaries work.

One option could be to not use primaries at all. For instance, Virginia Republicans in 2021 decided not to hold a primary and instead made their selections at a state party convention. Obviously, that's not a common choice.

States can also use a hybrid nominating system that includes caucuses and conventions as well as a primary. In Colorado, Utah and possibly other states, candidates can get on the primary ballot either by going the convention route OR by gathering enough signatures.

In Colorado, for instance, the parties have conventions where delegates vote. Candidates that receive at least 30% of the vote at the convention go straight to the primary ballot—and on the primary ballot they are listed in order of how many votes they received. Other candidates can get on the primary ballot by collecting signatures.

States can also require a connection between candidates and their parties. In Arkansas, candidates who want to be a party's nominee for legislative office must complete a party pledge, pay a party filing fee and file a "party certificate." That system means candidates have to engage with the party before getting on the ballot.

In fact, it's not uncommon for states to have some kind of notification requirement where would-be candidates must signal their intention to their party. Delaware, for instance, requires candidates to pay a party filing fee.

Another way to regulate potential candidates for primaries is to increase either the filing fees for running for office, or the number of signatures that must be collected. As for filing fees, for legislative offices, I have several examples:

- In Florida, the fee is set at 6% of the first year's salary, which is $30,000, so the filing fee is $500.
- In California, it is set at 1% of the first year's salary, which is $123,000, so $1,230.
- In Montana, the fee is $15, and in Pennsylvania it is $100.
- And, a third of states do not set a fee at all. New Jersey fits this category, I believe.

As for signatures, I see that for legislative offices, New Jersey requires 100 signatures from the district. That is on the low end nationwide. It's hard to compare states because some use a set number, like New Jersey, but others use a percentage of a given vote total. In North Carolina, signatures from 5% of registered voters in the district are required. Obviously, requiring more signatures can be a way to deter frivolous candidates.

Now I'm moving on to some smaller ballot design decisions that still matter to candidates and voters. These questions are independent of whether an "office block" or "rows and columns" approach is taken.

For instance, in some states, an icon or emblem for the party can be included. This was common decades ago because it gave a voter a short-hand way to know which candidate represented their preferred party. Now, I think most people aren't as tuned into political symbols, and the party name suffices. I'll note that Delaware does include party emblems on ballots.

As for whether incumbency is denoted on the ballot, it could be a useful piece of information for the voter. At least California, Florida and Georgia allow incumbency to be noted on the ballot. Other states include that information in government-provided voter information pamphlets. Perhaps clarify in law is more important than whether incumbency is included or not.

Similarly, states vary on whether nicknames can be printed on the ballot. Is it OK to be "Richard 'RC' Smith"? Hawaii allows nicknames and Hawaiian-equivalent names, and in Indiana, candidates can choose their given name or their nickname. In North Carolina, the state board of elections sets standards that say, "Those standards shall allow the presentation of legitimate nicknames in ways that do not mislead the voter or unduly advertise the candidacy." Again, what matters most is probably that the law is clear.

It will be no surprise to hear that states also vary on whether honorifics and titles, such as "Reverend" or "PhD," can be printed on the ballot. Still, it is more common to prohibit the use of honorifics. For instance, in Vermont statute says, "Professional titles such as "Dr," "Esq.," or "CPA" shall not be used as part of a candidate's name on the ballot." Again, probably what matters is that the law is clear and applied equally.

States mostly prohibit candidates from including a slogan. California is an exception to the rule. It permits candidates to have one (and only one) of the following designations appear on the ballot: "words designating the office the candidate holds at time of filing, incumbent or appointed incumbent, or no more than three words designating either the current principle professions, vocations or occupations of the candidate in the year prior to filing." By including these very few words, the ballot itself provides at least a hint about who the candidates are.

Mr. Chairmen and members of the committee, I know you are at the beginning of your study on these topics. If I may, I'd like to leave you with a few policy questions:

- Can your existing technology be adapted to easily switch from rows and columns to office blocks? Specifically, can existing technology be programmed to provide primary ballots one way and general election ballots the other way? I think the answer is yes, but that's a better question for your election officials and your vendors to answer.
- Do you prefer to have the whole state design ballots in the same way? There are advantages to consistency, but also elections are traditionally run at the local level with local control, so knowing how your local election officials see this question would be important.

- What trends do you expect for the future on what voting method voters will choose? Will more people vote by an absentee/mail ballot vs. in person? If so, is it important that the general ballot designs for these two major forms of voting mirror each other?
- Are ballots written in "plain language?" Is the ballot, and probably all the related materials such as instructions and signage, written so the intent is easily understood? One place it matters the most: with ballot measures. In 2023, New York enacted a requirement for all statewide ballot measures to be written at or below an eighth grade reading level, and to be written in a Yes or No format.
- How does New Jersey meet the needs of citizens who have limited English proficiency? I think that some of your counties are required by federal law to provide language assistance in Spanish, Korean and at least one southeast Asian language. It is possible that written translations are required, in which case the clearer the English version, the clearer the other-than-English version will be. It's also likely that audio translations are provided. Just for comparison, Los Angeles County supports at least 18 languages other than English.
- Rather than specify details such as font size or requiring specific language on ballots, could statute require that ballot design, for instance, say "adhere to best practices for voter usability?" That is flexible terminology—and sometimes flexibility is a blessing and sometimes a curse.
- Last, is there a way to find out what voters want? We can guess they want an intuitive, easy-to-use ballot. And your voters are familiar with the row-and-column approach. What will change mean for them? Of course voters are adaptable, but still field testing some ballot designs might be in order. In fact, ballot design experts suggest field testing all ballot choices, such as language and layout on the page, if that's feasible at the local level. It could be that vendors or academics might be able to help with that.

With that, I want you to know I'll be following your action on this topic closely because it's exciting work. I'll be glad to have NCSL dig deeper on anything that comes up for your committee over time, and right now, I'll answer questions if I can!

Instructions to the Voter

1. To vote for any candidate whose name is printed on this ballot, fill in the oval to the right of the candidate's name (from this ○, to this ●). Do not vote for more than the number of candidates to be elected to each office.
 2. Use only a pencil or ink pen (black or blue) to mark your ballot. Do not use red ink.
 3. To vote for a person whose name is not printed on this ballot, write the person's name in the blank space (marked "write-in") beside the proper title of office and fill in the oval to the right of the name (from this ○, to this ●).
 4. Do not mark this ballot in any manner other than provided for and do not erase. If you spoil your ballot, request a new one from the County Clerk. If you mark your ballot in such a way that your intent is unclear, or if you vote for more than the number to be elected to an office, your vote for that office will not be counted.
- TO PROTECT YOUR VOTE: It is against the law for anyone except you, the voter, to mark or inspect this ballot. However, a family member may assist you in doing so. If you are an incapacitated voter, a person other than a family member may also assist you in doing so.

Instrucciones al Votante

1. Para votar por cualquier candidato cuyo nombre está impreso en ésta boleta, rellene el óvalo a la derecha del nombre del candidato (de este ○, a este ●). No vote por más candidatos que el número a ser electo a ese cargo.
 2. Use solo lápiz o bolígrafo (negro o azul) para marcar su boleta. No use tinta roja.
 3. Para votar por una persona cuyo nombre no está impreso en ésta boleta, escriba el nombre de la persona en el espacio (marcado "escriba") a la derecha del título apropiado del cargo, y rellene el óvalo a la derecha del nombre (de este ○, a este ●).
 4. No marque ésta boleta de ninguna otra manera que la provista y no borre. Si daña su boleta, pida una nueva en la oficina del Secretario del Condado. Si marca su boleta de tal manera que su intención no es clara, o si vota por más del número de candidatos a ser electos a ese cargo, su voto para esa cargo no será contado.
- PARA PROTEGER SU VOTO: Es contra la ley para cualquier persona, excepto el votante, marcar o inspeccionar ésta boleta. Sin embargo, un miembro de su familia puede asistirle en el proceso de voto. Si usted es incapacitado, una persona no familiar le puede ayudar.

Dear Ballot Design Committee Members,

We understand that the NJ Legislature has formed a committee to codify ballot design in our state, in the wake of Judge Curatish's ruling for office block design.

News reports state that there will be public hearings on the matter.

However, we have no information on public hearings. As an Atlantic County voter, I am requesting input on the matter and providing early opinions. I will be circulating an online petition to this effect:

—Multiple accessible public meetings including testimony from NJ voters

—Provisions to allow online comments on the matter prior to decisions

—Testimony by Julia Sass Rubin regarding her research prior to decisions

—An explanation of why this committee is needed, since Judge Curatish's ruling sufficed for two elections already —Any new ballot design needs to be approved by ordinary voters, not party operatives. Democracy is for us, not our elected officials. Ballots should be easily understood by the newest and most experienced voters alike.

Further:

The ballot should not allow for brackets, color coding, or other markings or designs beyond office block. It should comply with Judge Curatish's ruling.

There should be an explanation of why this committee feels that NJ voters need some sort of ballot design different than all the other states in the USA, if that is the case.

Thank you for your consideration.

Lisa Bonanno
