Hudson County Mental Health Records
Room 203, Building 1, Meadow View Complex
Secaucus, New Jersey

As part of Berger's historical background research to locate additional information about the burial ground/Potter's Field, the administrative records from the Hudson County Institutional Complex were inventoried. The following is an overview of the records, files, and ledgers stored at the Meadowview County Complex.

Content of records

A. Patient case files

This collection consists of several thousand individual cases. The records of some patients have been destroyed. For an evident few (see the tattered remnants on the shelves next to the door), this has been by deterioration because of conditions in Room 203, perhaps combined with accident. In addition, perhaps as many as 1,000 case files, all for people who had died while in the institution, were purposefully destroyed for some unknown reason on April 27, 1973. Fortunately, cover pages with basic data on the patients were preserved, so that they can still be tracked. The 4/27/73 files did not represent all, or probably even a majority, of the mental patients who died while in the institution.

For some reason, the patient case papers are distributed in groups through most of the room, with little observable pattern to the distribution. NOTE: according to Mr. Kevin Barry, Hudson County Facility Manager, the contents of the file cabinet at the east end of the north wall, which Berger's researcher could not open, consist mostly of additional patient case files. Berger would recommend that the case papers all be gathered together, and sorted according to some basic organizational scheme, such as alphabetically. In creating this inventory, Berger's researcher gave the various groups approximate dates, based on the patient admission dates.

B. Patient record ledger books

These items are concentrated in the file cabinet that is located off-center to the room and toward the window, and on the pallet situated between that door and the cabinet. The collection consists of a variety of specific forms of ledger, mostly concerned with counting patients and tracking their arrival and departure (or demise). Each ledger was presumably created for a particular counting purpose, so they overlap to some extent, with the same items of data (e.g., a death) appearing in different books. Although the data in these books is of a very limited nature (for instance, death is noted but not the cause), they would be useful for tracking the basic history of a given patient.

C. Patient financial records

A very large number of patient financial record items are stored in Room 203, including several boxes of patient commissary account papers (noting each cup of tea, etc.), records pertaining to the collection of past due accounts for patient care, more than 500 books of receipts for payment of patient care charges, and several ledgers recording patient accounts, mostly from the mid-twentieth century. These financial records do not appear to be useful for Berger's study— they are merely mentioned to note that they represent a high proportion of the room's contents.

D. Miscellaneous records

A wide variety of additional mental hospital records are housed in Room 203, especially personnel files, and financial records concerning payroll and supply delivery.

The remaining 2 unopened cases are labeled "inactive files," A-F and G-Z.)

PRELIMINARY SURVEY AND DATA COLLECTION
MEADOWVIEW CAMPUS CEMETERY
Town of Secaucus, Hudson County, New Jersey

Prepared For:

Mr. John Keller, P.E.
Assistant Supervising Engineer, Highways
New Jersey Turnpike Authority
New Brunswick, NJ

As requested by the New Jersey Turnpike Authority (NJTA), The Louis Berger Group, Inc. (Berger), has performed the preliminary survey and data collection tasks at the Meadowview Campus Cemetery in Secaucus. The following sections provide discussions of the methodologies and results of this preliminary investigation.

Prepared By:

The Louis Berger Group, Inc.
120 Halsted Street
East Orange, NJ

A. SCOPE OF SERVICES

On behalf of the New Jersey Turnpike and the County of Hudson, The Louis Berger Group, Inc. (Berger) conducted a preliminary survey of a potential cemetery located at 595 County Avenue (within the Meadowview Campus Facility) in Secaucus, Hudson County, New Jersey.

Berger's initial task was to map, record, and collect grave markers in a fenced, vacant lot and wooded area northeast of the Meadowview building complex. Berger accomplished the work on July 22 and 23, 2003. Berger personnel included Roderick Brown, Principal Archaeologist, Robert Jacoby, Field Supervisor, David Gilmour, Field Supervisor, Max Black, Jeffery Williams, and Carl Welch, Field Technicians.

In conjunction with Berger's work, Hager-Richter Geoscience, Inc. (H-R) conducted a non-intrusive remote sensing survey of the ground below the markers using ground penetrating radar (GPR). The GPR was employed to explore for subsurface features that might indicate the presence of human remains. Hager-Richter's preliminary findings are included as Attachment A.

B. GRAVE MARKER SURVEY AND COLLECTION

Based on the results of the initial field inspection, the grave markers are located in two areas. One group includes in situ markers arranged in three rows, approximately two meters (6.56 feet) apart, trending east-west. Within each row, the markers are separated by approximately 0.7 meters (2.3 foot) intervals. Additional, uninstalled markers were scattered in the wooded area north of the aforementioned rows.

Each marker is approximately three-inches (0.08 meter) in diameter and consists of a hollow concrete cylinder ranging in length between 12 and 18 inches (0.31 and 0.46 meters). Each cylinder has a porcelain disk affixed to one end by means of a protuberance on the underside of the disk that was inserted into the hollow cylinder. Each porcelain disk is impressed with a four-digit number though some are broken and only partially legible. Each in situ grave marker had been installed, porcelain disk down, in a post hole containing a small amount of concrete at the bottom. The concrete adhered to the marker and had to be removed to expose the number on the porcelain disk. Concrete had been applied to the upper, exposed end of each cylinder and had been painted white.

To facilitate precise recording of the locations of each cylinder, Berger established a metric grid, the north-south axis of which was parallel to the fence bounding the area of investigation on the west. Grid north was located at an approximate bearing of 338 degrees Magnetic. A survey station (Station 1) was established by driving a 2" x 2" wooden hub approximately 5 meters (16.4 feet) west of Row 1, the southernmost of three rows of in situ grave markers. Station 1 was assigned arbitrary coordinates of 200 meters Easting, 200 meters Northing (200E/200N). Two additional hubs were set, one at the east end of the rows, and an additional one to the south towards the gate to register the GPR survey results (Figure 1). Each hub was labeled with its grid coordinates and each was pin flagged. A Topcon GTS 300B total station, occupying Station 1, was used to measure the location of each marker and various other features (i.e., fences and edges of wooded areas) in the vicinity. The survey record includes the precise coordinates of each marker and the four digit number impressed on the porcelain disk.

A total of 111 in situ markers were located (Table 1). Sixty-eight had porcelain disks with legible numbers which were recorded. In addition, Berger examined several gaps in the rows for completely buried markers by probing with shovels. On completion of the survey work, Berger replaced each marker into the hole from which it was removed.

Berger also examined the wooded area north of the rows of in situ markers for additional markers. Twenty-seven uninstalled markers were found in a relatively small area on the surface in the wooded area (See Figure 1). Twenty-four of the uninstalled markers displayed legible numbers which were recorded. The markers were then placed into five cardboard boxes on which the contents were listed (Table 2). Mr. Kevin Barry, Hudson County Facility Manager took possession of the boxes containing the collected markers.

C. CONCLUSIONS

Based on the results of this preliminary survey, Berger identified and mapped three parallel rows of grave markers consisting of a total of 111 in situ markers. Row 1, the southernmost row, contained 32 markers with 13 identifiable four-digit numbered markers. Row 2 is comprised of 31 grave markers containing 12 identifiable four-digit numbered markers. The longest row, Row 3, situated at the northernmost edge of the surveyed area, contains a total of 48 markers with 43 identifiable four-digit numbered markers. In addition, Berger collected 27 uninstalled markers from the wooded area located north of the tree parallel rows of installed markers. A total of 25 uninstalled markers contained identifiable four-digit numbers. In sum, 138 markers were identified and/or collected and 93 contained identifiable four-digit numbers.

During the fieldwork, Berger did not identify any artifacts or other indicators of human remains or interments (i.e., coffins, coffin nails, etc.) on the surface. No subsurface or intrusive measures of investigation were conducted by Berger as part of this effort.

The GPR survey conducted by Hager-Richter Geoscience, Inc. (H-R) identified several anomalies. "The records do contain some consistent mappable reflections, but whether they are caused by soil changes of archaeological significance or by local variations in soil stratigraphy cannot be determined by the GPR records alone". H-R's survey does not reveal unequivocal evidence for the presence of human remains. Whether the anomalies or disturbances are due to the presence of human remains or other can only be determined by ground truthing (i.e., subsurface testing-excavation).

RE: Ground Penetrating Radar Survey
Meadowview Campus Cemetery
Secaucus, New Jersey

Dear Ms. Grzybowski:

In this letter, we report the preliminary results of a ground penetrating radar (GPR) survey conducted at the Meadowview Campus Cemetery in Secaucus, New Jersey. The scope of the project and area of survey were specified by The Louis Berger Group (Berger). The GPR survey is part of a cultural resource investigation of the cemetery by Berger for the New Jersey Turnpike Authority.

INTRODUCTION

Berger is currently investigating a known Potters Field that was operated by Hudson County and is located adjacent to the New Jersey Turnpike in Secaucus. A new Turnpike interchange is to be constructed at that location, and all remains in the graves must be disinterred and re-interred at another location in Hudson County. Hager-Richter was contracted by Berger to provide geophysical services at the main site.

According to information provided by Berger, some of the remains from the Potters Field were to have been relocated to the nearby Meadowview Campus Cemetery several decades ago. Grave markers from the Potters Field were located by others in the Meadowview Campus Cemetery, and Berger requested a GPR survey of the area to help determine the presence and location of the re-interred remains. Berger specified an area of interest measuring approximately 6 meters by 38 meters.

APPROACH

Because of the sensitivity of the cemetery site, a non-intrusive geophysical method was sought by Berger prior to any intrusive activity. The GPR method is the most widely used geophysical method in archaeological investigations at sites where the electrical properties of the soils are such that adequate GPR signal penetration is achieved. The GPR method provides useful and graphic information about site stratigraphy and man-made structures within the depth of exploration. At the Meadowview Campus Cemetery site, the man-made structures of interest are possible graves, grave shafts, bones, and other evidence of human remains. The effective depth of exploration of the GPR method is controlled by local site conditions, however, and may vary from zero to several meters within one site.

Detection, identification, and archaeological significance are to be carefully distinguished. In general, geophysics is an excellent tool for detection of subsurface features, but, with minor exceptions, if used without other information, it is poor for the identification and determination of archaeological significance of such features. Detection, as used in geophysical surveys, is the recognition that an object or feature is present in the subsurface. The GPR was employed here to explore for subsurface features that might indicate the presence of human remains. Identification for this project requires the determination that a feature is a grave rather than an area of disturbed soils. Objects of archaeological significance generally do not have distinctive characteristics that allow them to be distinguished from objects of no archaeological significance on the basis of their geophysical signatures alone.

Thus, the interpretation of GPR data in terms of detection is relatively "straightforward." However, the identification and determination of archaeological significance depends on experience and requires confirmation by way of ground truth for most objects. The ground truth can be in the form of as-built plans and/or personal observations of the results of excavation. It is our understanding that Berger plans to use the results of the GPR survey to determine locations for possible excavation at a later date. Thus, the "ground truth" for most of the objects detected in this GPR survey will not be available until such an investigation is performed.

OBJECTIVE

The objective of the GPR survey was to explore for subsurface features that might be related to the possible presence of re-interred human remains in the accessible portions of an area of interest specified by Berger at the Meadowview Campus Cemetery in Secaucus, New Jersey.

THE SURVEY

The GPR survey was conducted on July 28, 2003 by Alexis Martinez of Hager-Richter. The project was coordinated with Mr. Roderick Brown of Berger.

EQUIPMENT & PROCEDURES

The GPR survey was conducted using a Sensors and Software Noggin Plus Smartcart digital ground penetrating radar system. The Smartcart system is self-contained and includes a survey wheel to record data at equal horizontal intervals. A 250 MHz GPR antenna was used for the survey and data were recorded with a 50 nsec time window that corresponds to an approximate depth of exploration of about 2.5 meters below grade based on handbook values for the velocity of GPR data in unsaturated soil and rock.

GPR traverses were conducted along parallel traverses approximately ⅓ meter apart and oriented parallel to a survey baseline established by Berger. GPR data were acquired at 1-centimeter intervals along each traverse.

Data processing was performed using EkkoMapper, commercially available GPR processing software from Sensors and Software, and Surfer, commercially available contouring software from Golden Software. Horizontal "time slices" of relative amplitude for the reflected GPR signal were generated for four depth intervals to enhance features that might appear as a function of depth.

LIMITATIONS OF THE GPR METHOD

The maximum depth to which GPR signals can penetrate depends on the electrical properties of the subsurface materials. The higher the electrical conductivity of the subsurface materials, the lower the radar signal penetration. Clay minerals and/or brackish water in the subsurface, for example, attenuate the GPR signal, so reflections are not received from materials at greater depths.

There are limitations of the GPR technique as used to detect and/or locate particular targets: (1) surface conditions, (2) electrical conductivity of the ground, (3) contrast of the electrical conductivities of the targets and the ground, and (4) spacing between lines. Of these limitations, only the fourth, line spacing, is controlled by the operator.

The condition of the ground surface can affect the quality of the GPR data and the depth of penetration of the GPR signal. Sites covered with high grass, bushes, landscape structures, debris, obstacles, soil mounds, etc., limit the survey access and the coupling of the GPR antenna with the ground. In many cases, the GPR signal will not penetrate below concrete pavement, and a target may not be detectable.

The electrical conductivity of the ground determines the attenuation of the GPR signals, and thereby limits the maximum depth of exploration. The GPR signal does not penetrate clay-rich soils, and targets buried in clay can be missed.

A contrast in the electrical conductivities of the ground and the target is required to obtain a reflection of the GPR signal. If the contrast is too small, possibly due to extremely corroded conditions of a metal target, then the reflection may be too weak to recognize, and the target can be missed.

The spacing between lines is under control of the GPR operator, and the design of the survey is based on the dimensions of the smallest target of interest. Targets with dimensions smaller than the spacing between GPR survey lines can be missed.

Interpretation of GPR data is subjective. As noted above, "ground truth" through correlation with borings and excavations is required for positive identification of most objects detected on the basis of GPR data.

RESULTS AND DISCUSSION

The GPR survey at the Meadowview Campus Cemetery consisted of nineteen traverses spaced a-meter apart, for a total of approximately 722 meters of traverse. GPR signal penetration at the site was generally limited to not more than about 1-1.5 meters below the ground surface. The GPR equipment records the two-way travel time of the GPR signal and we used a time window of 50 nsec. To convert GPR signal travel time to depth in the earth, we used a handbook value of 20 ns/m, typical for unsaturated soils. We estimate that the potential depth of investigation by the GPR survey was about 2.5 meters below the ground surface. However, most of the GPR records show reflections to only about 30 nsec, corresponding to approximately 1.5 meters.

The GPR data set was processed to produce horizontal slices of the relative amplitude of the reflected GPR signals for approximately 0.4-meter depth intervals to enhance features that might appear as a function of depth. For the purposes of this project, we concentrated our interpretation of the data on the depth interval of likely archaeological interest, i.e., from approximately 0.4 meters to the effective depth of exploration. Objects within about 0.4 meters of the surface were assumed to be within a zone of recent landscape activities.

Figures 1 and 2 shows the results of the GPR survey presented as color contour plots of the relative amplitude of the GPR reflections. The relative amplitude scales for the plots are not uniform with depth and were arbitrarily selected to show the range in GPR signal amplitudes for the various depth intervals.

The objective of the GPR survey was to determine possible locations of re-interred remains from the nearby Potters Field. Based on Berger's ongoing work at the main Potters Field site, one might expect that relocated remains at the Meadowview Campus Cemetery site would likely consist of disarticulated bones and bone fragments, fragments of pine coffins, and other small personal artifacts. We have no knowledge of whether the relocated remains would have been maintained in coherent grave shafts correlating with those encountered at the main Potters Field site or in a regular array of graves such as one might find in other historic cemeteries.

Disarticulated human bones are relatively small objects that do not have sharply contrasting electrical properties compared to surrounding soils. We judged that the relocated human remains, if present at the Meadowview Campus Cemetery site, would occur in areas of disturbed soils located at or near the grave markers visible at the surface. We specifically searched the GPR data for reflection patterns that might correlate with the possible location of relocated graves.

Apparent variations in soil materials produced irregular GPR patterns laterally and vertically throughout the area of interest at the Meadowview Campus Cemetery site. There are no regular patterns that would indicate the presence of an array of individual grave shafts associated with the visible grave markers. At the bottom of Figure 2, we indicate our interpretation of two types of disturbed ground: 1) broad, general areas of disturbed ground, and 2) smaller areas of disturbed ground spatially related to the grave markers (labeled as possible re-interment areas).

As noted in the Introduction, detection and identification are to be carefully distinguished. Although the interpretation of GPR records in terms of detection is relatively "straightforward," the identification of objects detected depends on experience and requires confirmation by way of ground truth. The expected GPR signatures of relocated human remains from the main Potters Field are not sufficiently different from the surrounding soil and rock to distinguish easily such materials from other naturally occurring objects (cobbles, mineral encrusted tree roots, etc.) or man-made objects not currently of archaeological interest (soda bottles, bricks, recent construction debris, etc.). Whether the detected areas of disturbed ground at the Meadowview Campus Cemetery site contain human remains can only be determined by "ground truth," i.e., excavation.

CONCLUSIONS

The GPR data acquired at the Meadowview Campus Cemetery site do not contain unequivocal evidence for the presence of human remains. The GPR records do indicate that consistent mappable areas with reflections typical for disturbed soils are present in the survey area, but whether they are caused by relocated graves or by local variations in soil stratigraphy cannot be determined by the GPR records alone.

0. EXECUTIVE SUMMARY

Hager-Richter Geoscience, Inc. conducted a geophysical survey at a site known as Potters Field in Secaucus, New Jersey in July, 2003 for The Louis Berger Group (Berger) of East Orange, New Jersey. The scope of the project and areas of survey were specified by The Louis Berger Group (Berger). The geophysical survey is part of a cultural resource investigation of the site by Berger for the New Jersey Turnpike Authority.

The Potters Field site is located adjacent to the east branch of the New Jersey Turnpike in Secaucus. A new Turnpike interchange is to be constructed at that location, and all human remains in the graves must be disinterred and re-interred at another location in Hudson County. Hager-Richter was contracted by Berger to provide geophysical services at the site.

Berger requested a geophysical survey of portions of the Potters Field site where excavations were ongoing, incomplete, or not started. The objectives of the geophysical survey were to detect possible grave shafts and related archaeological artifacts. Berger also suggested that several geophysical methods be tested to determine which method(s) might provide more useful information about subsurface conditions at the Potters Field site.

The geophysical survey was conducted in six areas of interest designated as Areas 1 - 6. The areas of interest represented varying surface conditions and levels of known subsurface conditions. The geophysical methods included ground penetrating radar (GPR), time domain electromagnetic induction metal detection (EM61), frequency domain electromagnetic induction with two different instruments (EM38 and EM31), and magnetics. Not all of the methods were used in each area of interest due to access and time limitations. Reconnaissance geophysical surveys were conducted in Areas 1 - 4 using various non-intrusive geophysical methods. The GPR method was the only method used in Areas 5 and 6.

With regard to the relative effectiveness of the geophysical survey methods used, we conclude:

- The GPR and EM61 methods provided the most useful information about subsurface conditions at the Potters Field site.
- Surface conditions in the survey areas greatly affected the quality of the geophysical information that could be acquired.

With regard to the geophysical results by survey area, we conclude:

Area 1 – Several areas of disturbed ground and buried metal are present and might correlate with the presence of grave shafts.

Area 2 – The geophysical data were so affected by irregular surface conditions and surface metal that independent information about subsurface conditions could not be determined. The known grave shafts could not be detected reliably.

Area 3 – The presence of metal containing fill and debris over the level of the former Potters Field prevented the detection of grave shafts under the fill.

Area 4 – Small amounts of buried metal are widely distributed throughout the survey area in an array that might be expected for personal artifacts in grave shafts.

Area 5 – Several areas of disturbed ground are present and might correlate with the presence of grave shafts. A faint linear feature crossing one corner of the area was detected at the expected location of the edge of grave shafts.

Area 6 – Several areas of disturbed ground are present and might correlate with the presence of fill used in the construction of the detention center. Whether the fill in the areas of disturbed ground contains features of archaeological interest could not be determined.

1. INTRODUCTION

The Louis Berger Group (Berger) of East Orange, New Jersey is currently investigating a known Potters Field that was operated by Hudson County and is located adjacent to the east branch of the New Jersey Turnpike in Secaucus. Figure 1 shows the general location of the site. A new Turnpike interchange is to be constructed at that location, and all human remains in the graves must be disinterred and re-interred at another location in Hudson County. Hager-Richter was contracted by Berger to provide geophysical services at the site.

According to information provided by Berger, the Potters Field site was used as a cemetery by Hudson County for several decades, possibly as early as the late 19th century and as late as the middle of the 20th century. Historic records for the site are limited, but indicate that over 3500 persons were interred in an approximately 3-acre area. In recent decades, the site became thickly overgrown, and variable types and thickness of fill and debris had been placed over large portions of the cemetery. The only structure related to the Potters Field remaining at the time of survey was the ruins of a brick caretakers cottage. Hudson County had built a two-building detention center that partially covered a portion of the Potters Field. The detention facility is no longer in use, and Berger was using the buildings for its laboratory and storage facilities. Figure 2 is a site plan that shows the main features of the site at the time of survey.

Berger started systematic archaeological excavations at the Potters Field site in February, 2003. Several feet of fill were removed in portions of the site to reach the original cemetery elevation. Much of the original 3-acre site had been excavated and over 2600 sets of human remains had been disinterred prior to the beginning of the geophysical survey work in July, 2003. Berger had found that the site contained grave shafts with two or three stacked sets of human remains each and, in places, two layers of grave shafts with differing orientations were present. Grave shafts had been discovered adjacent to the northern detention center building, and it was unclear how extensive the cemetery limits were.

Berger requested a geophysical survey of portions of the Potters Field site where excavations were ongoing, incomplete, or not started. The objectives of the geophysical survey were to detect possible grave shafts and related archaeological artifacts. Berger suggested that several geophysical methods be tested to determine which method(s) might provide more useful information about subsurface conditions at the Potters Field site.

2. APPROACH

2.1 General

The geophysical survey at the Potters Field site was conducted in six areas of interest specified by Berger and designated as Areas 1 - 6 (Figure 2). Table 1 briefly describes the areas of interest and survey objectives in each area. Reconnaissance geophysical surveys were conducted in Areas 1 - 4 using various non-intrusive geophysical methods. The geophysical methods consisted of ground penetrating radar (GPR), time domain electromagnetic induction metal detection (EM61), frequency domain electromagnetic induction with two different instruments (EM38 and EM31), and magnetics. Not all methods were used in each area of interest due to access, and time, and weather limitations. The GPR method was the only method used in Areas 5 and 6. Table 2 shows the geophysical methods used in each area.

2.1.1 GPR. The GPR method is the most widely used geophysical method in archaeological investigations at sites where the electrical properties of the soils are such that adequate GPR signal penetration is achieved. The GPR method provides useful and graphic information about site stratigraphy and man-made structures within the depth of exploration of the GPR signal. At the Potters Field site, the man-made structures of interest are possible graves, grave shafts, bones, and other evidence of human remains. The natural features of interest to this survey are the landforms on which the Potters Field was sited. The effective depth of exploration of the GPR method is controlled by local site conditions, however, and may vary from zero to several meters within one site.

2.1.2 EM61. The EM61 is used in archaeological investigations to detect buried metal objects. The EM61 a high sensitivity, high resolution metal detector that can detect electrically conducting metal objects buried to depths of about 3 meters. The unit used for the Potters Field investigation was a state-of-the-art 4-channel model with a single small coil to increase resolution of small objects. The targets of interest for the EM61 were the small metal artifacts associated with the human remains. Based on information provided by Berger, small amounts of metal, including such objects as coins, jewelry, metal buttons, pens, and hair ornaments, as well as coffin nails were found with some of the human remains.

2.1.3 EM38 and EM31. The frequency domain electromagnetic induction method is widely used in archaeological investigations to detect areas of higher and lower electrical conductivity in shallow subsurface soils that might be related to human activities. The EM38 is a shallow terrain conductivity meter that measures lateral variations in the electrical conductivity of subsurface soils with a nominal depth of exploration of about 1½ meters, and the EM31 has a nominal depth of exploration of about 5.5 meters. The EM38 and EM31 are also sensitive to the presence of electrically conducting metal objects in the their depth of exploration, but is less sensitive than the EM61. The primary target of interest for the EM38 and EM31 surveys was the grave shaft locations, based on the theory that the grave shafts might exhibit subtle, but systematic variations in soil conductivity. Berger had indicated that its field archaeologists used very subtle changes visually detected in the soils to determine the locations of grave shafts, which might also be detected by the EM38.

2.1.4 Magnetics. The magnetic method is commonly used in archaeological investigations to detect buried ferrous metal objects and burn pits. A magnetic survey measures lateral variations in the earth's magnetic field which can caused by the presence of ferrous metal objects, geological changes, and man-made magnetic fields. When a magnetometer is used with two vertically separated sensors, as was done at the Potters Field site, local variations in the earth's vertical magnetic gradient are measured, and the locations of buried metal objects can be resolved more accurately than with total magnetic field data only. The targets of interest for the magnetic survey at the Potters Field were ferrous metal objects in the grave shafts.

2.1.5 Detection & Identification. Detection, identification, and archaeological significance are to be carefully distinguished. In general, geophysics is an excellent tool for detection of subsurface features, but, with minor exceptions, if used without other information, it is poor for the identification and determination of archaeological significance of such features. Detection, as used in geophysical surveys, is the recognition that an object or feature is present in the subsurface. The geophysical methods employed here to explore for subsurface features that might indicate the presence of human remains cannot firmly identify the objects. Identification for this project requires the determination that a feature is a grave shaft rather than an area of soils disturbed otherwise. Objects of archaeological significance generally do not have distinctive characteristics that allow them to be distinguished from objects of no archaeological significance on the basis of their geophysical signatures alone.

Thus, the interpretation geophysical data in terms of detection is relatively "straight forward."

However, the identification and determination of archaeological significance depends on experience and requires confirmation by way of ground truth for most objects. The ground truth can be in the form of as-built plans and/or personal observations of the results of excavation. The "ground truth" for most of the objects detected in the subject geophysical survey will not be available until Berger has completed its archaeological investigations in each area.

2.2 The Survey

The geophysical survey was conducted on July 8-11 and 29-30, 2003. Hager-Richter personnel James Coffman, P.G., Mohammed Hayat, Alexis Martinez and Robert Garfield conducted the field operations. The project was coordinated with Mr. Roderick Brown, Principal Archaeologist of Berger. Additional support was provided by Ms. Susan Grzybowski, Assistant Director/Senior Archaeologist, and Berger on-site personnel, including Robert Jacoby and David Gilmour.

Berger had established on-site survey control and provided baseline information to us for each survey area. All locations in this report are referenced to Berger's survey coordinates.

2.3 Equipment & Procedures

2.3.1 GPR. The GPR survey was conducted using a Sensors and Software Noggin Plus Smartcart digital ground penetrating radar system. The Smartcart system is self-contained and includes a survey wheel to record data at equal horizontal intervals. A 250 MHz GPR antenna was used for the survey and data were recorded with a 50 nsec time window that corresponds to an approximate depth of exploration of about 2.5 meters below grade based on handbook values for the velocity of GPR data in unsaturated soil and rock.

GPR traverses were conducted along parallel traverses approximately a - ½ meter apart and oriented parallel to survey baselines established by Berger. GPR data were acquired at 1 cm intervals along each traverse.

Data processing was performed using EkkoMapper, commercially available GPR processing software from Sensors and Software, and Surfer, commercially available contouring software from Golden Software. Horizontal "time slices" of relative amplitude for the reflected GPR signal were generated for various depth intervals to enhance features that might appear as a function of depth.

2.3.2 EM61. The EM61 survey was conducted with a Geonics EM61-MK2 4-Channel Hand Held time domain electromagnetic induction metal detector. It consists of a powerful transmitter that generates a pulsed primary magnetic field, which in turn induces eddy currents in nearby metal objects. The decay of the secondary eddy currents is measured by the instrument at four time intervals (gates) centered at 147, 263, 414 and 613 sec after the primary pulse is turned off. By measuring the secondary magnetic field after the current in the ground has dissipated but before the current in metal objects has dissipated, the instrument responds only to the secondary magnetic field produced by metal objects. The length of an object's response is a function of its size and distance from the sensor (depth). The response is measured in mV and recorded on a hand-held computer. The system is generally operated by pulling the coil with an odometer mounted on the axle to trigger the data logger automatically at 0.1- or 0.2-meter intervals.

Data processing was conducted using Surfer, a commercially available software package, to produce color contour plots for each channel (time gate).

2.3.3 EM38. We used a Geonics Model EM38 and a Geonics EM31 frequency domain terrain conductivity meter. These instruments are calibrated to read apparent conductivity directly in millimhos per meter (mmho/m, numerically equivalent to the SI units, milliSiemens per meter, mS/m) with a resolution of 2% of full scale and an accuracy of 1 mmho/m where the ground conductivity is less than about 100 mmho/m). Disturbed and reworked areas that are either more or less conductive than the surrounding areas can be mapped. The data are recorded on a digital data logger and transferred to a computer at the end of each field day.

The EM38 has transmitter and receiver coils mounted with a fixed separation of 1 m in a rigid boom. It can be used in either vertical or horizontal dipole mode—that is, with the plane of the coils oriented either horizontally or vertically, respectively. The nominal depth of exploration for the EM38 is generally estimated to be about 0.75 m for the horizontal dipole mode, and 1.5 m for the vertical dipole mode.

The EM31 has transmitter and receiver coils mounted with a fixed separation of 3.66 m in a rigid boom. It also can be used in either vertical or horizontal dipole mode—that is, with the plane of the coils oriented either horizontally or vertically, respectively. The nominal depth of exploration for the EM31 is generally estimated to be about 2.75 m for the horizontal dipole mode, and 5.5 m for the vertical dipole mode.

Two components of the induced magnetic field measured by the EM38 were recorded: (1) the quadrature-phase component; and (2) the in-phase component. The quadrature-phase component is a measure of the average terrain conductivity of the subsurface materials located between the receiver and transmitter of the EM38. The in-phase component is sensitive to the presence of conductive metal objects; however, the exact identification of the object cannot be determined from the terrain conductivity data alone.

EM38 and EM31 data were acquired along survey lines, and recorded in digital format for ease of processing using PCs. The apparent conductivity and in-phase component are plotted in profile format and/or as contour maps using commercially available software such as Surfer.

2.3.4 Magnetics. We used a Geometrics Model G858_G Cesium Vapor Magnetometer as the survey magnetometer. The G858_G can record data at 0.1 second cycle rates with a 0.05 gamma sensitivity. Data are stored in non_volatile RAM for playback review in the field and downloading to a computer. Both the total magnetic field and vertical gradient of the earth's magnetic field were recorded. We used a Geometrics Model G_856 portable proton precession magnetometer as a base station. The instrument recorded the natural temporal variation of the earth's magnetic field at one-minute intervals. Such data are used to check for magnetic ‘storms’ and to correct the survey data for the daily diurnal variation of the earth’s magnetic field.

Magnetic data were acquired at the Potters Field site along survey lines spaced ½ m apart. The data were digitally recorded and processed into color contour plots of the total magnetic field and vertical magnetic gradient using Surfer, commercially available software.

2.4 Limitations of the Methods

2.4.1 GPR. The maximum depth to which GPR signals can penetrate depends on the electrical properties of the subsurface materials. The higher the electrical conductivity of the subsurface materials, the lower the radar signal penetration. Clay minerals and/or brackish water in the subsurface, for example, attenuate the GPR signal, so reflections are not received from materials at greater depths.

There are limitations of the GPR technique as used to detect and/or locate particular targets: (1) surface conditions, (2) electrical conductivity of the ground, (3) contrast of the electrical conductivities of the targets and the ground, and (4) spacing between lines. Of these limitations, only the fourth, line spacing, is controlled by the operator.

The condition of the ground surface can affect the quality of the GPR data and the depth of penetration of the GPR signal. Sites covered with high grass, bushes, landscape structures, debris, obstacles, soil mounds, etc. limit the survey access and the coupling of the GPR antenna with the ground. In many cases, the GPR signal will not penetrate below concrete pavement, and a target may not be detectable.

The electrical conductivity of the ground determines the attenuation of the GPR signals, and thereby limits the maximum depth of exploration. The GPR signal does not penetrate clay-rich soils, and targets buried in clay can be missed.

A contrast in the electrical conductivities of the ground and the target is required to obtain a reflection of the GPR signal. If the contrast is too small, possibly due to extremely corroded conditions of a metal target, then the reflection may be too weak to recognize, and the target can be missed.

The spacing between lines is under control of the GPR operator, and the design of the survey is based on the dimensions of the smallest target of interest. Targets with dimensions smaller than the spacing between GPR survey lines can be missed.

Interpretation of GPR data is subjective. As noted above, "ground truth" through correlation with borings and excavations is required for positive identification of most objects detected on the basis of GPR data.

2.4.2 EM61, EM38 and EM31. All electromagnetic geophysical instruments, including the EM61, EM38, and EM31 instruments used here, are affected by the presence of power lines and surface metal objects (metal sided buildings, dumpsters, vehicles, railroad tracks, reinforced concrete, etc.) Where such are present, the effects of materials in the subsurface may be masked, and firm conclusions about subsurface conditions cannot be made.

2.4.3 Magnetics. Magnetic data are also affected by the presence of power lines and surface metal objects (steel sided buildings, dumpsters, vehicles, railroad tracks, reinforced concrete, etc.) Where such are present, the effects of materials in the subsurface may be masked, and firm conclusions about subsurface conditions cannot be made. Magnetic data are also affected by natural ‘magnetic storms’ due to sunspot activity and should not be acquired during such events.

3.1 General

The results and interpretation of the geophysical survey in Areas 1 - 6 at the Potters Field site are presented in Figure 2-68. Not all geophysical methods were used in all areas due to access, time, and weather conditions. The Potters field site was very active, with excavation work being conducted by the site archaeologists in several areas simultaneously. The time available to work in each area of interest was limited by Berger's active excavation schedule. Heavy precipitation and muddy soils during the field effort limited the time available to work in some areas. After the first few days of geophysical survey, we concluded that the GPR method was providing the most useful data despite relatively limited depth of GPR signal penetration, and we concentrated our effort on that method. Table 2 summarizes the use of geophysical survey methods by Area.

Based on Berger's work at the Potters Field site, the targets of interest for the geophysical survey were the grave shafts containing disarticulated bones and bone fragments, fragments of pine coffins, and small personal artifacts. Disarticulated human bones are relatively small objects that do not have sharply contrasting electrical properties compared to surrounding soils. The soils visible in excavations consist of rocky and poorly sorted ferruginous sandy soil. The pine coffins were generally deteriorated. The types of personal artifacts found by Berger were small in number and volume, making them difficult targets to detect.

We searched the GPR data for reflection patterns that might correlate with the possible location of grave shafts. We searched the EM61, EM38, EM31, and Magnetic data for indications of buried metal. We searched the EM38 and EM31 apparent conductivity data for subtle variations in soil conductivity that might be related to grave shafts.

3.1.1 GPR. The GPR survey at the Potters Field site was conducted in Areas 1, 3, 5, and 6. GPR signal penetration at the site was generally limited to about 1 - 1.5 m. The GPR equipment records the two-way travel time of the GPR signal and we used a time window of 50 nsec. To convert GPR signal travel time to depth in the earth, we used a handbook value of 20 nsec/m, typical for unsaturated soils. We estimate the potential depth of investigation by the GPR survey was about 2.5 m below ground surface. However, most of the GPR records show obvious reflections to only about 30 nsec, corresponding to approximately 1.5 meters. With computer processing, faint reflections from greater depths were enhanced in some cases.

The GPR data sets were processed to produce horizontal slices of the relative amplitude of the reflected GPR signals for various depth intervals to enhance features that might appear as a function of depth. For the purposes of this project, we concentrated our interpretation of the data on the depth interval of likely archaeological interest, i.e., from approximately 0.5 m to the effective depth of exploration.

3.1.2 EM61. The EM61 survey at the Potters Field site was conducted in Areas 1 - 4. The EM61 data sets were processed for each of the four time gates recorded, which correspond to the relative mass of the metal objects. By examining the four time gate plots, one can discriminate larger and smaller metal objects and clusters of metal objects. The EM61 data are judged to be very useful for this project, except in Area 3 where the data are too strongly affected by the miscellaneous metal debris in the fill.

3.1.3 EM38 and EM31. The EM38 survey at the Potters Field site was conducted in Areas 1, 3, and 4. The EM31 survey was conducted in Areas 1 and 2. The apparent conductivity and in-phase component data sets for the EM38 and EM31 were processed. In general, the EM38 and EM31 data were judged not to provide the fine resolution and systematic patterns required to discriminate the targets of interest for this survey. Thus, although the EM38 and EM31 results are presented here, the data were not used in the integrated interpretation for the areas of interest in which they were conducted.

3.1.4 Magnetics. The magnetic survey was conducted in Area 2 as a pilot test. The total magnetic field and vertical magnetic gradient data were processed. The magnetic data were judged not to be useful for this project, and the acquisition of data was discontinued after examining the data from Area 2.

3.2 Area 1

Area 1 was an unpaved roadway that had been located outside the exterior perimeter fencing at the east end of the former detention center. Area 1 was one of the better areas for the geophysical survey because the ground was level and not vegetated, did not contain fill, and excavation activities had not begun. The objective of the geophysical survey in Area 1 was to search for possible grave shafts in that area. The geophysical survey included the use of GPR, EM61, EM38, and EM31. The geophysical results for Area 1 are shown in Figures 3 - 19.

3.2.1 GPR. Figures 3 to 10 show the results of the GPR survey presented as color contour plots of the relative amplitude of the GPR reflections for various approximate depth intervals. The relative amplitude scales for the plots are not uniform with depth and were arbitrarily selected to show the range in GPR signal amplitudes for the various depth intervals.

Grave shafts, if present, would be expected to appear as rectangular areas of disturbed ground of limited lateral extent that are persistent with depth. Examination of the GPR data indicated the presence of several such areas, shown on Figure 19, the integrated interpretation plot as overlying GPR anomalies for selected depth intervals.

3.2.2 EM61. The results of the EM61 survey for Area 1 are shown in Figures 11 - 15 as color contour plots of the instrument response for the four time gates. The EM61 data indicates that buried metal objects are present in many of the same areas as the possible grave shafts detected by the GPR survey. On Figure 19, all areas containing buried metal detected with the EM61 are outlined. The areas of positive EM61 anomalies in Figures 13 and 14 (time gates 3 and 4, respectively) may correlate better with metal artifacts at depth, however.

3.2.3 EM38 and EM31. The results of the EM38 and EM31 surveys are presented in Figures 15 - 18 as color contour plots of apparent conductivity and the in-phase component. The apparent conductivity data (Figures 15 and 17) appear to be affected by the chainlink fence along the western edge of the survey area, and the shallow soils exhibit generally higher values of apparent conductivity (approximately 26-38 mmho/m, Figure 15) than the deeper soils (approximately 10-14 mmho/m, Figure 17). The EM38 in-phase component data (Figure 16) indicate that buried metal is present in the central portion of the survey area, but the resolution of the data is not as good as that from the EM61. The EM31 in-phase component data (Figure 17) do not indicate the presence of buried metal, and we infer that the buried metal objects detected with the EM61 are too small to affect the EM31. Therefore, in the integrated interpretation plot (Figure 19), we did not rely on either the EM38 or EM31 data.

Area 2 was located in an active excavation area south of the former detention center and an embankment for the existing elevated New Jersey Turnpike. Several feet of vegetation, fill, and debris had been removed previously, and Berger's field archaeologists had marked out the locations of grave shafts with nails, wooden stakes, and string based on their visual observations. Archaeological excavation of the grave shafts had not begun, but the ground surface was very irregular because the elevations of the tops of adjacent grave shafts varied in places by ¼ - a meter.

Area 2 was selected for geophysical survey because the cover had been removed and the grave shafts, which had not yet been disturbed, were outlined and expected to be within about ½ meter of the surface. The objective of the geophysical survey in Area 2 was to search for evidence of the grave shafts where their locations were previously identified by visual archaeological methods. The geophysical survey in Area 2 included the use of EM61, EM31, and Magnetics. The use of GPR was attempted in Area 2, but because the ground surface was so rough, adequate coupling of the GPR antenna to the ground could not be achieved, and the GPR method was discontinued. The EM38 was not used in Area 2 due to time constraints of excavation activities. It is unfortunate that neither the GPR nor EM38 could be used to acquire data in Area 2 because the known grave shafts would have made excellent targets to test those methods at the Potters Field site. The geophysical results for Area 2 are shown in Figures 20 - 28.

3.3.1 EM61. The results of the EM61 survey for Area 2 are shown in Figures 20 - 23 as color contour plots of the instrument response for the four time gates. As noted elsewhere in this report, the EM61 is an excellent high resolution metal detector. The color contour plots in Figures 20 - 23 exhibit several small positive EM61 anomalies, but almost all are associated with the nails marking out the corners of the grave shafts identified by the Berger field archaeologists. On Figure 18, the areas of surface and buried metal detected with the EM61 are outlined.

3.3.2 EM31. The results of the EM31 survey in Area 2 are presented in Figures 24 and 25 as color contour plots of apparent conductivity and the in-phase component. The apparent conductivity values (Figure 24) generally increase from west to east and may reflect the general change in surface topography at the time of survey. The EM31 in-phase component data (Figure 25) do not indicate the presence of buried metal, and we infer that the metal objects detected with the EM61 are too small to be detected by the EM31. Therefore, in the integrated interpretation plot (Figure 28), we did not rely on the EM31 data.

3.3.3 Magnetics. The results of the magnetic survey in Area 2 are presented as color contour plots of the total magnetic field and vertical magnetic gradient in Figures 26 and 27, respectively. The total magnetic field data (Figure 26) exhibit a general increase from southwest to northeast, but contain no information of interest to the archaeological investigation. The vertical magnetic field data (Figure 27) exhibit several small anomalies indicating the presence of ferrous metal, but most of the anomalies correlate with the locations of surface metal (nails) marking the corners of grave shafts.

Area 3 was an unexcavated portion of the site located west of the ruins of the caretakers cottage at the Potters Field site. An unpaved trackway crossed through Area 3, and Berger had stripped most of the thick vegetation that previously covered the remainder of the area. An unknown thickness of fill, including visible metal debris, had not been stripped at the time of the geophysical survey. Berger suspected that grave shafts might be present in Area 3 but had not yet begun excavation activity. Area 3 was selected for geophysical survey to test whether grave shafts could be detected in areas that had not yet been stripped. The geophysical survey in Area 3 consisted of the use of GPR, EM61, and EM38. The results of the geophysical survey in Area 3 are presented in Figures 29 - 43.

3.4.1 GPR. Figures 29 to 36 show the results of the GPR survey presented as color contour plots of the relative amplitude of the GPR reflections for various approximate depth intervals. The relative amplitude scales for the plots are not uniform with depth and were arbitrarily selected to show the range in GPR signal amplitudes for the various depth intervals.

Examination of the GPR data indicates that the trackway is characterized by low amplitude reflections relative to the filled areas on either side of the trackway. Where metallic debris is known to be present in the fill, we judge that high amplitude GPR reflections from the fill would mask the subtle reflections that would come from grave shafts, if present below the fill. On Figure 43, the integrated interpretation plot, areas of GPR anomalies for various depth intervals in Area 3 are outlined, but the anomalies are attributed to the material in the fill overlying the level of the former Potters Field.

3.4.2 EM61. The results of the EM61 survey for Area 3 are shown in Figures 37 - 40 as color contour plots of the instrument response for the four time gates. The EM61 data indicates that buried metal is abundantly present on both sides of the unpaved trackway in Area 3. As with the interpretation of the GPR data, we infer that the EM61 anomalies due to metal in the fill overlying the level of the former Potters Field would mask On Figure 43, all areas containing buried metal detected with the EM61 are outlined.

3.4.3 EM38. The results of the EM38 survey are presented in Figures 41 and 42 as color contour plots of apparent conductivity and the in-phase component. The apparent conductivity data (Figure 43) indicate that soil conducivity is highly variable, probably due the the presence of the fill. The EM38 in-phase component data (Figure 42) indicate that buried metal is present, especially in the vicinity of the former caretakers office, but the resolution of the data is not as good as that from the EM61.

3.5 AREA 4

Area 4 was a portion of an unpaved roadway located along the southern perimeter of the former detention center. Area 4 was located in an area suspected by Berger to contain shallow grave shafts, but excavation had not begun at the time of the geophysical survey. Fill was not present in Area 4. The objective of the geophysical survey was to detect the possible grave shafts. The geophysical survey in Area 4 consisted of the use of EM61 and EM38. A GPR survey could not be conducted in Area 4 due to heavy rains which made the soils too muddy to move the GPR equipment. The geophysical survey in Area 4 consisted of the use of EM61 and EM38. The results of the geophysical survey in Area 4 are shown in Figures 44 - 50.

3.5.1 EM61. The results of the EM61 survey for Area 3 are shown in Figures 44 - 47 as color contour plots of the instrument response for the four time gates. The EM61 data indicates that small amounts of buried metal are widely distributed throughout Area 4. Because no fill or visible surface metal was present, the EM61 anomalies are attributed to buried metal. The distribution of small anomalies in Area 4, particularly for time gates 2 - 4 (Figures 45 - 47), suggests an alignment somewhat parallel with the general orientation of grave shafts previously detected near the southeast corner of the East Building of the former detention center. The locations of all buried metal detected with the EM61 are shown in Figure 50.

3.5.2 EM38. The results of the EM38 survey in Area 4 are presented in Figures 48 and 49 as color contour plots of apparent conductivity and the in-phase component. The apparent conductivity data (Figure 48) exhibits a y-shaped set of linear conductivity lows. There is no expression of the y-shaped anomalies in either the EM38 in-phase component data (Figure 49) or the EM61 data (Figure 46 and 47), and we infer that the linear anomalies are caused by a non-metal utility, perhaps drain lines. The EM38 in-phase component data (Figure 49) indicate that buried metal may be present in the survey area, but the resolution of the data is not as good as that from the EM61.

3.6 AREA 5

Area 5 was a relatively small unpaved area that was formerly a portion of a paved basketball court for the former detention center. At the time of survey, Area 5 was located adjacent to an area of active grave shaft excavations. The Berger field archaeologists indicated that grave shafts were expected to occur within the very shallow subsurface in Area 5, with the northern edge of grave shafts expected to cross the northwestern corner of the survey area. We conducted a GPR survey in Area 5 using closely spaced survey lines (a meter apart). The results of the GPR survey in Area 5 are given in Figures 51 - 59.

3.6.1 GPR. Figures 51 to 58 show the results of the GPR survey presented as color contour plots of the relative amplitude of the GPR reflections for approximately 0.2-meter depth intervals to a depth of about 1.4 meters. The relative amplitude scales for the plots are not uniform with depth and were arbitrarily selected to show the range in GPR signal amplitudes for the various depth intervals.

The GPR data shown in Figure 51 exhibit a faint diagonal linear feature crossing the northwestern corner of the survey area, possibly indicating the limit of grave shafts expected by the Berger field archaeologists. The linear feature is faint, however, and not persistent with depth. We would not have picked it out as a feature of interest without input from the Berger archaeologists, however. Examination of the GPR data indicates the presence of several small areas of possible disturbed ground, shown on Figure 59, the interpretation plot, as GPR anomalies for selected depth intervals. Some of the areas of disturbed ground may correlate with the locations of grave shafts.

Area 6 consisted of the accessible portions of paved areas between the East and West Buildings of the former detention center. At the time of survey, excavation activities had not occurred in Area 6. The Berger field archaeologists indicated that grave shafts were not expected to occur except possibly along the southernmost edge of Area 6. The landform on which the Potters Field had been situated had possibly been leveled in part for the construction of the detention center, and whether artifacts were present below the paved areas had not been determined prior to the geophysical survey. The objective of the geophysical survey in Area 6 was to search for areas of possible archaeological interest below the pavement. The results of the GPR survey in Area 6 are given in Figures 60 - 68.

3.7.1 GPR. Figures 60 to 67 show the results of the GPR survey presented as color contour plots of the relative amplitude of the GPR reflections for various intervals to a depth of about 1.4 meters. The relative amplitude scales for the plots are not uniform with depth and were arbitrarily selected to show the range in GPR signal amplitudes for the various depth intervals.

The GPR data for Area 6 show regions of relatively high amplitude GPR reflections across the survey area. Persistent areas of relatively high amplitude GPR reflections are shown in Figure 68 and appear to be concentrated in the northern portion half of the survey area, perhaps where additional fill was placed during construction of the former detention center. Whether any of the areas outlined in Figure 68 contain material of archaeological interest can only be determined by excavation.

4. CONCLUSIONS

The geophysical survey at the Potters Field site in Secaucus, New Jersey consisted of the use of several geophysical methods in six areas of interest. With regard to the relative effectiveness of the geophysical survey methods used, we conclude:

The GPR and EM61 methods provided the most useful information about subsurface conditions at the Potters Field site.

Surface conditions in the survey areas greatly affected the quality of the geophysical information that could be acquired.

With regard to the geophysical results by survey area, we conclude:

Area 1 – Several areas of disturbed ground and buried metal are present and might correlate with the presence of grave shafts.

Area 2 – The geophysical data were so affected by irregular surface conditions and surface metal that independent information about subsurface conditions could not be determined. The known grave shafts could not be detected reliably.

Area 3 – The presence of metal containing fill and debris over the level of the former Potters Field prevented the detection of grave shafts under the fill.

Area 4 – Small amounts of buried metal are widely distributed throughout the survey area in an array that might be expected for personal artifacts in grave shafts.

Area 5 – Several areas of disturbed ground are present and might correlate with the presence of grave shafts. A faint linear feature crossing one corner of the area was detected at the expected location of the edge of grave shafts.

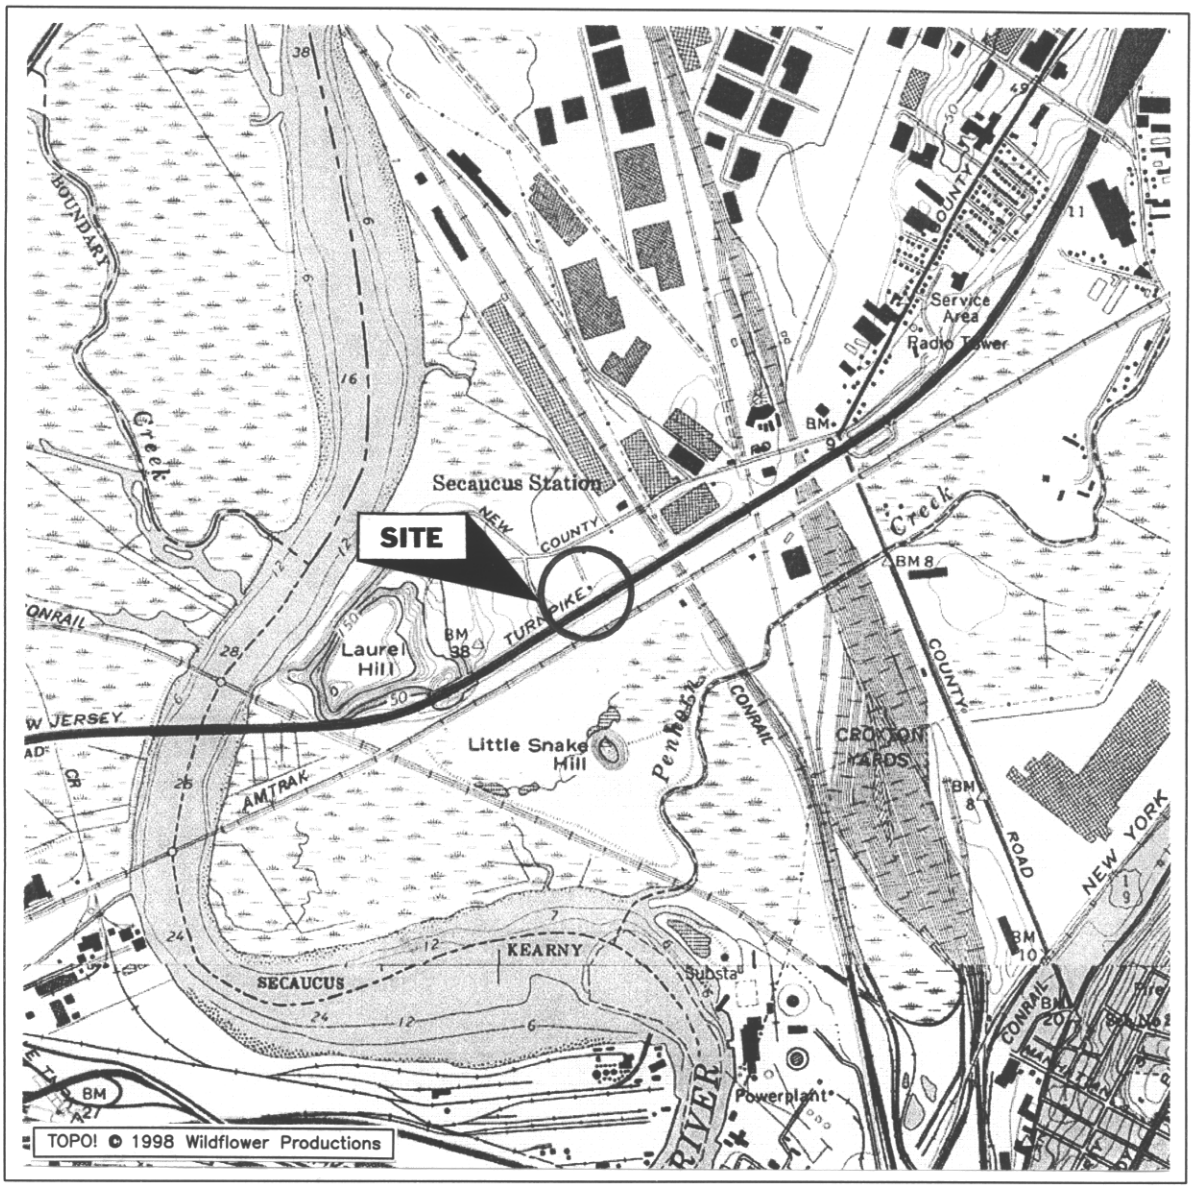

Area 6 – Several areas of disturbed ground are present and might correlate with the presence of fill used in the construction of the detention center. Whether the fill in the areas of disturbed ground contains features of archaeological interest could not be determined.
