Eclipses for the year 1817.

Only two Eclipses will take place this year, and both will be of the Sun.

1. The Sun will be eclipsed on Friday, May 16th, at 2 h. 4 m. morning, invisible. It will be central on the meridian, in lat. 5 deg. 44 m. N. and lon. 150 deg. 56 m. E.* The penumbra's centre will strike in Africa, among the Hotteatots, pass near the north end of Madagascar, traverse the Indian Ocean, enter the Bay of Bengal near the Island of Ceylon, run so little to the north of Siam that the eclipse will be nearly annular there, and, turning more towards the Equator, (after a continuance of 3 hours 51 minutes on the earth,) go off at the Pelew Islands.

2. There will be an eclipse of the Sun on Saturday, November 8th, at 9 h. 11 m. in the evening, also invisible. This eclipse will be central and total, on the meridian, in lat. 7 deg. 33 m. S. and lon. 136 deg. 15 m. W.

* It should always be understood, that longitude is reckoned from the meridian to which the calculations are fitted, unless otherwise expressed.

NOTE.—Venus (♀) will be evening star until May 21st, this year, then morning star until March 12th, next year.
Latitude of Herschel (♃) about 1 minute south, this year.

An easy method of knowing the principal Stars.

When the Almanac shows the rising, setting or southing of a Star, observe which of the first magnitude is so situated at the given time; then by noting its arrangement with other stars or constellations, it may be known ever after, if a fixed star, or for the present season of the current year, if one of the planets. Thus, even children may innocently and instructively amuse their friends and one another, by pointing out several of the most conspicuous by name, and finding the time of night by them with the Almanac.

BEGIN IN TIME.

“Albert possessed, at the death of his father, a wide domain; he planned vast improvements; and intended to meliorate the condition of his tenants. He daily contemplated this object; and resolved to set about it quickly. He thought of it in the morning and in the evening; but the follies and fashions of the times engrossed him for the remainder of the day; still he would do it, he was determined on it. Thus he continued till he had arrived at the age of forty, when he set about it in good earnest: but ere he could complete his project, he died. He did not begin in time.

“Clarissa was an enchanting girl; handsome, but not accomplished. She wished to be pious and godly; but she was so young, and had so many admirers—and, it would do when she grew older. She fell sick; death hovered about her; then she wanted religion; it was then she would begin; it was too late; she died in a phrenzied state. She did not begin in time.

“Tom Dashall had a habit of swearing. He would fain mend it; he resolved on doing it; and he would begin soon. He kept on, however, till the age of fifty, and was then a disgusting object of profanity. He began to mend; but the next year he departed this world. He did not begin in time.

“Sam Thirsty was fond of strong drink. His friends told him if he persisted it would kill him. Sam laughed, thinking he could leave it off when he pleased. He grew old and grew worthless. Then he strove against it; but it was all in vain: he did not begin in time.

“Timothy Giddy chose to be a lawyer. He would study hard, that he would. He frolicked with the men and coquetted with the girls; yet, he would begin, he said, to apply himself very closely. He went on in the old way, frolicking, coquetting and resolving till the time came for him to appear at

COGITATIONS OF UNCLE JOHN.

AFFECTION is said to descend. The love of children to their parents, it is contended, bears no proportion to the love of parents to their children. The former, it is maintained, is a sentiment; the latter a passion. Children are said to conform to the will of their parents from duty, ...while the devotion of parents to their children springs from love. Hence in every state of society, civilized or savage, parents protect and cherish their offspring with the tenderest care ; but the attention of children to their parents is generally proportioned to the degree of refinement existing in society. By refinement it should not be understood that state where every man can speak French—play whist—cut a pegen wing—waltz—kill his friend the first shot, or smile when the heart is rankling with anger ; but where the moral sense is refined—where virtue is cherished—and the will of the High and Holy One is esteemed supreme and sacred.

It is stated by Lewis and Clark, in their tour to the Western Ocean, that some tribes of Indians, when about to change their place of residence, set before their old men provisions for a few days, and then abandoned them to perish. Every refined and generous bosom is struck with horror at such barbarity.

Notwithstanding this fact, and the general opinion expressed to the contrary, I think there is good ground to conclude that a strong natural affection exists in the hearts of children to their parents. If not, whence arises the horror and detestation that have occurred, of children being disrespectful to their parents—sometimes rude—and occasionally cruel. An instance recently mentioned in the public prints, as having lately taken place, in a neighboring state, is, considering the state of society, more disgraceful and barbarous than the conduct of the Missouri savages. Two sons, having obtained the estate of their father, suffered him to be sued, and actually imprisoned, for a small debt, refusing to relieve him!

If I see a man treat his father with disrespect—

I set him down as lacking understanding. If he is cruel—in my memorandum book he is noted as a savage. But a child who could work on a parent's affections and confidence to obtain his property, and then abandon him to want, must be a wretch so vile that no name expressive of his baseness has yet been discovered. Prudence is an estimable virtue. It is an act of superlative folly for any man to give all his property to his children. Keep enough for your own wants, and trust no man too far. Prudence never injured any man—confidence has ruined thousands. Listen a moment and I will tell you a story :

An old man had a large estate, and at the solicitation of his children, upon promises of the kindest treatment, he made it all over to them. Immediately their conduct towards him changed—"Instead of HONORED FATHER," it was "The old man."—In the place of "WHAT WILL YOU CHOOSE FOR YOUR DINNER, SIR?" it was—"There's your porridge."

Although the old gentleman had lost his property, he retained his wit; and hunger, you know, is a wonderful sharpener of the faculties. He took his measures; and pretty soon a neighbour who was about to remove, brought home an old iron-bound chest, very heavy, observing "that he had long felt uneasy at having the property of other people in his care, and was glad of an excuse to return it into the hands of its owner." "Very well," said the old gentleman, "a few thousands, more or less, is no great matter to one who has enough; but it may be of service to my dear children when I am gone." The chest was placed in his room—a lock put on the door, and now and then he was overheard counting and throwing something into it that chinked like gold. No one doubted his wealth—and to the inquiries of his children, he answered that his will would be found enclosed. The scene was instantly changed again. No children could be more dutiful and attentive. No father was ever served more to his heart's content. At his death his children waited half an hour, for decency's sake, and then ran to open the chest, where, to their great surprise, they found some old pieces of iron, and a mallet, with this homely, but wise distich labelled on the handle:

"He that gives away his estate before he is dead,
Take this mallet and knock him on the head."

On the other hand—besides the case cited of Aeneas, history furnishes us with numerous instances of filial affection worthy to be recorded.

A noble Roman was condemned to be starved to death. His daughter was admitted to visit him, but was carefully examined, to see that she took no provision to her father. But he did not die as was expected, and on looking secretly into his prison, the father was seen drawing his sustenance from the breasts of his daughter. A sight so lovely melted the hearts of his tyrants, and he was pardoned. The fact is often alluded to.

BURKE, in one of his speeches, says :

“The scarcity which the old world has felt would have been a desolating famine, if this child of her old age [America] with true filial piety—WITH A ROMAN CHARITY, had not put the full breast of its youthful exuberance to the mouth of its exhausted parent.”

With one more beautiful instance of filial affection I shall close this paper. When Elijah cast his mantle on Elisha, with the command to follow him, and devote himself to the MOST HIGH, what did Elisha ask?—to bury his treasure, or to place his gold at usury?—Oh, no!—“Let me, I pray thee,” said he, “KISS MY FATHER AND MY MOTHER, and then I will follow thee.” Excellent man! Thou wert indeed worthy to be a prophet in Israel!

ONE THOUSAND DOLLARS REWARD.

RAN away from the Subscriber, within a few years, his WHOLE ESTATE; consisting of houses, lands, &c. They gradually and almost imperceptibly stole away, after being put in motion by the magic art of Intemperance, who lived in the family. Any person who will put me in possession of said estate, shall be entitled to the above reward.

TOPER.

 N. B.... All persons are cautioned to beware of said INTEMPERANCE, who, as I am told, has established several places of rendezvous through the country, where numerous of the incautious are daily seduced.

They who take pleasure in hearing calumnies uttered against innocent persons, are as guilty as those who publish them.

Miscellaneous Selections.

THE FASHIONS,

ABOUT THE YEARS 1815—16.

Bob Tandem was rich, a smart, generous young wight,
And he soon found a beautiful bride.

This gentleman brave and his lady so bright,
Both follow'd the fashions, by day and by night ;
The tip-top of the fashion was all their delight,
And no dollars for that were deny'd.

Full five or six months glided smoothly along,
And all was like honey so sweet ;
When he join'd with backs, he could sing a good song,
And she was so fair she could never do wrong,
Her beauty and bounty were prais'd by the throng,
So lovely, so wise and discreet.

' Now, my dear,' says the lady, ' these carpets and chairs
Are quite out of fashion to day ;
And all the old curtains and mirrors up stairs,
Must be sent to the Auction, with crockery wares,
And the old fashion'd tables be sold off in pairs ;
Dear Bobby, now what do you say ?'

' I say,' as John Gilpin once said to his wife,
My dear it shall quickly be done.'
The old furniture then was turn'd out in a trice,
From the bed and beaureau to the dish, spoon and knife,
And then with more haste than is made to save life,
Newest fashions the house overrun.

New servants, new liveries, and rich Mountain wine,
Her taste was the talk of the town,
Peerless shawls of Merino, and laces so fine,
And her looking glass whisper'd her ' something divine ;'
Then the beau monde were invited to dine,
And her revels were—' Down derry down.'

Next day the fair lady found fault with her coach ;
It was all out of fashion, and queer,
' O how I should like to see every one crouch,
And be up—where the vulgar ones dare not approach—
Six beautiful bays, and a splendid barouche,
Would deter them from coming too near.'

Now a splendid barouche, and harness so bright,
And six beautiful bays you might see ;
Lady Tandem then rode on the wings of delight,
The rabble all run to see—O what a sight ;
Just as Captain PORTER return'd from the fight,
Drawn by two legged horses so glee !!

Thus her whims were all sooth'd, without let or delay,
And large debts were contracted apace ;
But mark ! he who runs headlong in business or play,
Will meet with a rubber some wo-betide day ;
His bright eagles take wings and will all fly away ;
And such was Bob Tandem's sad case.

These fashions in high life descend to the low,
And pride over prudence prevails.
If the mistress runs gadding the maid will run too,
And the servant should follow his master you know ;
And in chace of the fashions together they go,
Though the fashions should lead them to jails.

—Molly Sturgeon had also a husband so bold,
And they too after fashions must run.
Says Molly, 'See my fish-tubs and baskets are old,
And quite out of fashion, so they shall be sold,
And I must have new ones or else I will scold,
And like Mrs. Tandem, my rings shall be gold.'
'Aye, says Davy, it shall quickly be done.'

But new tubs, and new baskets, and new fashioned clothes,
With high living so costly, as every one knows,
And gold rings, and gold jewels, so dashing,
Ran David most deeply in debt :

Which made him look round with a stare !
Then Molly said, 'David take care !

You needn't to fret,
Nor fly in a pet,
And scare me to fits with your passion,
For 'tis all in the fashion,
And you shall have half what I get.'

Now so fine and so gay to fish market she goes,
'Come buy, here they are ! Shad sweet as a rose !'
Her sister-nymphs scouted and turn'd up their nose,
'Have a care Moll, your jib will be wet.'

Davy then follow'd fashions himself—for says he,
'Now I'll feast on the fruits of the Liberty Tree,

And whiskey shall temper my clay ;
I will smoke and drink deep, till I snore,
For my Molly sells fish by the score ;

Her money will pay :
For her baskets are fine as fish baskets can be,
She will have money enough both for her and for me ;
But alas ! he was sore disappointed—for she
Refus'd to sell fish any more.

So the sheriff took Robert and Davy away,
To a heavy stone house, where together they stay,
Some hard hearted new fashions to learn :

While their ladies both live in disgrace,
Joint tenants of one little place,
As cold as a bar.

Poor Richard's old Almanacs truly might say,
'When folks run in debt they should think about pay.'
B. t.—Sic omnibus here—each dog has his day;
And you see here the end of their race.

WASHING DAY.

MONDAY comes, and with it brings,
What the damsels all will say,
As they tie their apron strings,
Is the dreaded WASHING DAY.

SUNDAY night its woes begin,
Lovers late they dare not stay;
Girls will hint, it is a sin,
And to-morrow's Washing Day.

Up at daylight then they leap,
Soiled clothes together lay,
Sadly view the monstrous heap—
Work enough for Washing Day.

Now around the tubs they stand,
Like the graces in array;
Soap and dipper close at hand,
Useful things a Washing Day.

Short-sleev'd gowns and bosom bare,
They their beauteous limbs display,
Unadorn'd more winning, fair;
Choose a wife a Washing Day.

If, by chance, acquaintance knock,
Nancy cries, send all away,
Looking thus, I'd satan shock,
Not at home a Washing Day.

Should one heedless thro' them go,
Of the suds he gets a spray;
There's no passing here below,
Learn the rules of Washing Day.

Late at noon the table's laid,
Eat or famish then you may;
Dish of potluck then is made,
Dainties none a Washing Day.

When at last the work is done,
Drest at evening smart and gay,
With conundrum or a pun,
Passes off a Washing Day.

KITCHEN FIRE.

When cold and chilling rain-storms wet me,
And spatter me with mud and mire,
Oh soon, indulgent heaven, let me
Sit by the much lov'd KITCHEN FIRE.

When winter's piercing blasts oppress me,
And numb me with their freezing ire,
Let not those piercing blasts depress me,
But let me reach the KITCHEN FIRE.

When noisy children cease to fret me,
And to their beds in peace retire,
No midnight prowler dares to threat me,
And sweet is then, the KITCHEN FIRE.

When roaming, (vex'd as roamings make me,)
And thoughts of HOME my soul inspire,
Soon may the fleetest courses take me,
Back to the lovely KITCHEN FIRE.

FROM A LATE LONDON PAPER.

WATERLOO.

The Officer, his Wife, and the Baggage-Ass.

THE following interesting anecdote is taken from 'A Visit to Flanders,' and will give some idea of the kind of scenes that were passing during the memorable battle of Waterloo:

"I had the good fortune," says the intelligent writer, "to travel from Brussels to Paris with a young Irish officer and his wife, an Antwerp lady of only sixteen, of great beauty and matchless innocence and naivete. The husband was in the battle of Quatre Bras as well as of Waterloo, and to him

I owe much of my minutest and most interesting information.

“He was living in the cantonments at Nivelles, his wife with him. The unexpected advance of the French called him off at a moment’s notice to Quatre Bras; but he left with his wife, his servant, one horse, and the family baggage, which was packed upon a large ass. Retreat at this time was not anticipated, but being suddenly ordered on the Saturday morning, he contrived to get a message to his wife to make the best of her way, attended by the servant and baggage to Brussels. The servant, a foreigner, had availed himself of the opportunity to take leave of both master and mistress, and make off with the horse, leaving the helpless young lady alone with the baggage-ass. With a firmness becoming the wife of a British officer, she boldly commenced her retreat of twenty-five miles, leading the ass by the bridle, and carefully preserving the baggage, no violence was dared by any one to so innocent a pilgrim, but no one would venture to assist her. She was soon in the midst of the columns of the retreating British army, and much retarded and endangered by the artillery: her fatigue was great; it rained in water-spouts, and the thunder and lightning were dreadful in the extreme. She continued to advance, and got upon the great road from Charleroi, to Brussels at Waterloo, when the army on the Saturday evening were taking up their line for the awful conflict. In so extensive a field, and among 80,000 men, it was in vain to seek her husband; she knew that the sight of her there would only embarrass and distress him; she kept slowly advancing to Brussels all the Saturday night; the road choaked with all sorts of conveyances, wagons and horses; multitudes of native fugitives on the road and flying into the great wood, and many of the wounded walking their painful way, dropping every step, and breathing their last; every few steps lay a corpse or a limb; particularly, she said, severed hands. Many persons were actually killed by others, if by chance they stood in the way of their endeavours to save themselves. Added to the horrors, the rain continued unabated, and the thunder and lightning, still raged as if the heavens were torn to pieces. Full twelve miles further in the night this young woman marched up to her knees in mud, her boots worn entirely off, so that she was barefooted; but still unhurt, she led her ass; and although thousands lost their baggage, and many their lives, she calmly entered Brussels on the morning in safety, self, ass, bag and baggage, without the loss of an article. In a few hours after her arrival commenced the cannon's roar of the tremendous Sunday, exposed to which, for ten hours, she knew her husband to be—and after a day and night in agony she was rewarded by finding herself in her husband's arms, he unhurt and she nothing the worse, on the Monday. The officer told me the tale himself with tears in his eyes. With a slight Irish accent, he called her his "dare little woman," and said she became more valuable to him every day. I never saw a more elegant, gentlemanlike young man; and assuredly his pretty Belgium seemed almost to adore him. It gave additional value to the anecdote, that I had it from the actors in the scene described. When I remarked that it was quite in the spirit of ELIZABETH OF SIBERIA, the lady exclaimed, "Ah ma mere m'a dit la meme chose!" My mother made the same remark.

THE COGITATIONS OF UNCLE JOHN.

I am a young man, Mr. Caperton, and mingle very little in the political contests that so unfortunately distract our country; and I am not unfrequently amused by the disputes that arise between zealous politicians. A few months ago, business called me to Ohio, and as I was journeying westward, it was my fortune to overtake a good looking man, of about thirty-five, on his way to Pittsburg.

Liking his appearance, we concluded to travel together. Our conversation was, on the roads, the expense of travelling, and other unimportant subjects; when, on stopping at an inn for some refreshment, we found a genteel looking stranger, who we learned was going our road, and agreed to bear us company. The time passed away, for some hours, very agreeably. Both my companions proved intelligent, and from their unsolicited bounty and kind expressions to a poor soldier, who sat by the road side, left no doubt in my mind that they were very kind hearted and benevolent:

“That’s a brave fellow, I’ll warrant you,” said Mr. Freewell.

“Aye;” said Mr. Heartly, “our late glorious war evinced the courage of many a brave fellow.”

“So you think Mr. Madison’s war a glorious one, then I see, sir”—added Mr. Freewell.

“From your question I perceive, Sir,” replied Heartly, “you belong to the party that would prefer seeing their country imposed upon, than exerting spirit enough to resist her oppressors.”

“Your perceptions, Sir,” rejoined Freewell, “I suspect are not remarkably clear. I glory in belonging to a party that would not involve their country unnecessarily in war—without preparation—to propitiate a tyrant who had insulted them—sacrificing the best interests of their country to keep themselves in power—and finally, who would make a peace abandoning every object for which the war was ostensibly declared.”

“Sir,” said Heartly, “a party that would, when their country was engaged in war, refuse to advance funds for its support—who would vote against the necessary supplies—and endeavour to embarrass the government by inflammatory, factious publications, has a claim, in my opinion, to any character but that of patriotism. Pray, Sir, what is your opinion of the Hartford Convention?”

“I will answer you, Sir, if you will in the first place.”

tell me what you think of the Bladensburg races !”

Finding the disputants getting very warm, I interposed, and after some time, persuaded them to maintain their sentiments without permitting their passions to get the better of their judgments. As we rode on, each one maintained with some earnestness that he could tell a Democrat or a Federalist by his conduct and manners, without his saying a word on politics. A bottle of wine having been bet on the occasion, we jogged on till night very harmoniously.

The public house at which we lodged was large, commodious, and neat, situated in a limestone valley, surrounded by beautiful meadows, and having the appearance of wealth and comfort. The landlord was extremely attentive—sociable but not obtrusive. In the evening, his daughter, a fine girl of eighteen, played us a number of tunes on the Piano Forte, and the landlady treated us with a mince pie, some apples, and excellent cider. We were all delighted with the order, cleanliness, and kindness of our host and hostess, and when, before retiring to bed, the good publican called his family around him, and in an unaffected manner offered up his petition to the throne of grace, Freewell whispered in my ear, “A Federalist, I’ll warrant you—I’ll win of Heartly this time.”

Morning came—our bill was reasonable, and we were about taking leave, with feelings of more than common affection for so short an acquaintance—when Freewell asked, “May I take the liberty to inquire, Col. Maclean, whether in politics you are a Federalist or a Democrat?”

“You might as well ask,” replied he, “whether I was for my country or against it.”

“But pray be good enough to say, Colonel, whether you are a supporter of Mr. Madison and Mr. Snyder.”

“I desire to thank heaven,” said he, solemnly, “that we have had raised up for these trying times, men of such wisdom and patriotism.”

Heartly shook him cordially by the hand, while Freewell, with a look of disappointment, bid him good morning and rode on.

The next night found us far advanced on our journey. Our accommodations were neat, but not elegant. There was an appearance of cheerfulness, but not of wealth, in the family. The landlord was sprightly, intelligent, and agreeable. We had not been seated an hour before a traveller came in and mentioned that a strange woman seemed very ill, lying beside the road, about a mile back; he thought she had the fever. "It is a pity she should suffer," said the landlord, and immediately ordering his light wagon, and placing a bed and pillow in it, went to bring her to his house. "Are you not afraid of the dreadful disorder?" inquired the traveller, of the landlady. "We hope to do our duty," said she, mildly, "and leave the consequences to heaven." She was truly ill: she belonged on the borders of Maryland, and had been to visit her daughter. Being poor, she travelled on foot, was now out of money, sick, and expected to die by the road side. Mr. Oakley, with his kindest accents, bid her welcome, promised to take care of her, and sent Heartly for a physician. Heartly, I saw, was pleased, and in the evening remarked that we had got to another Democratic house. In the morning it was his turn to ask the question.

"Well, Mr. Oakley," said he, "will you have the goodness to gratify our curiosity so much as to tell us whether you are a Democrat or Federalist?"

"I'll tell you, Sir," said he, "I love my country too well to like to see her treasures squandered in useless wars—her sons butchered by peacemeal, in hopeless expeditions to Canada—or her farmers and mechanics burdened with an enormous load of taxes. If, added he, James Ross, and I know him well, or Rufus King, whom I know by character, or any other true son of Washington, had been at the helm, we should not have to mourn for 30,000 of our brothers who have died in the war, nor have had to groan under 150 millions addition to our debt."

Heartly put spurs to his horse—I followed, and in about half an hour Freewell overtook us, his countenance expressing the triumph he felt over his opponent.

The conclusion drawn by Heartly and Freewell was, in my opinion, not far from the true one:—that there were wise, and sincere, and good men, in both parties; seeing things in different aspects, but having equally at heart the best interests of the country; and that it was only necessary for the good of both parties to be better acquainted with each other's character and views, to do away a great portion of the party spirit that distracts the land.

ANECDOTES.

A member of the Boston Assembly, some years ago, vexed at something that had passed in the house, left it, in a pet, declaring as he went out, that not one of the members was fit to carry offals to a bear; the members being informed of this uncouth speech, were so much offended, that they sent word to the culprit, that as he had spoken in a very disrespectful manner of the house, they would not permit him to take his seat again, unless he would unsay what he had said, acknowledge he was sorry, and ask their pardon. The offender made his appearance, without hesitation, and upon entering said, "Gentlemen of this honorable house, being told that your honors are much incensed at an observation I made, and that I could only atone for my fault by making concessions, I now comply, (falling upon his knees)...Whereas, I said not one of you was fit to carry offals to a bear; I now unsay it, and declare you are every one very well qualified for that office; I ask your pardon, and am very sorry for it;...but really, (added he, rising and wiping the dust from his knees.) I think this is as dirty a house as ever I met with."

A mortal fever once prevailed on board a ship at sea, and a negro fellow was appointed to throw overboard the bodies of those who died from time to time. One day, when the captain was on deck, he saw the negro drawing out of the fore-castle a sick man, who was struggling violently to extricate himself from the negro's grasp, and remonstrating most bitterly against the cruelty of burying him alive.... 'What are you going to do with that man, you black devil?' said the captain. 'Going to trow him overboard, massa, cause he be dead,' replied the negro. 'Dead, you scoundrel,' says the captain, 'don't you see that he moves and speaks?' 'Why yes, massa,' replied the negro, 'I know he say he no dead; but he always lie so like e h—ll, nobody nebber know when to believe him.'

An Irishman meeting an Englishman, thus addressed him.... Ah! my dear, is it you? When I saw you at the other end of the street, I thought you were your cousin; as you came nearer, I thought you were yourself; and now I see you are your brother.

Not long since, two sailors passing by a tailor's shop, observed a tailor at work, with his waistcoat patched with different colours of cloth, 'Look ye Jack,' cried one of the tars, 'did you ever see so many sorts of cabbage grow on one stump before?'

A man who had established a tippling house, was about to erect his sign, and requested his neighbor's advice, what inscription to put on it. The man replied, 'I advise you to write on it, "Beggars made here."'

A pragmatial young fellow, sitting at table over against the learned John Scot, asked him what difference there was between Scot and sol? Just the breadth of the table, answered the other.

An Irishman, comparing his watch by St. Paul's clock, in New York, and bursting into a fit of laughter, was asked what he laughed at. He replied, "and how can I help it? when here is my little watch, that was made by Paddy O'Flaherty on, Ormondquay, and which cost me only five guineas, has beat your big London clock there a full hour and a quarter, since yesterday morning."

Before two rev'rend priests a cheese being set,
With insects fill'd...one liked such fare, and ate
Most ravenously; then wiping mouth, he said,
I've slain as many as e'er Sampson did:
His friend thus dryly answered, 'that is true,
And with the very self same weapon too.'

CURE FOR THE QUINCY. Sr...Should the following be worthy of a place in your paper, you will please to publish it, as I have proved the efficacy of it, having been afflicted more or less for five years, with the quincy, and for one year past entirely relieved of any of its symptoms:—Take rosin, camphor gum, and honey, simmered together, spread it on a flannel cloth, and wear it on the part affected for several days. I have never known it to fail.

HOW TO CURE THE GOUT. From the London Magazine.

Dr. Stenhouse, of Edinburgh, has adopted a method for the cure of the Gout, no less important for its simplicity than the almost instantaneous success with which it is attended.—The method is no more than holding the affected part over hot or boiling water. The Gout he considers as proceeding from obstruction. By the action of steam, the fibres are relaxed, or, what is the same thing, the pressure of the common atmosphere is diminished, and the cure of course follows. To confirm this theory by facts, the doctor relates his practice upon himself in two instances. He was first attacked in the hand; when the fit had acquired its last stage, both in pain and swelling, he held his hand over a common tureen full of boiling water.—In a few minutes the pain abated, and, in 25 minutes, entirely subsided: and, had it not been for the swelling, he could have used his hand as well as if nothing had happened. The second attack was in his foot, which he allowed to proceed for 24 hours. He then suspended it over a pail nearly full of boiling water, and covered it with flannel. In the course of an hour, he was free from pain, and walked about the room as usual. The doctor observes, that in case his stomach or bowels shall be attacked he will immerse his whole body in a hogshead of steam. He has been in good health, and free from gout ever since he tried these experiments, though very near seventy. This vapour bath ought to be repeated several times, even after the pain is removed, in order to effect a radical cure.

WHOOPIING COUGH. Many families being afflicted with the whooping cough, the following infallible cure has been published:—“Dissolve a scruple of the salt of tartar in a gill of water, add ten grains of cochineal finely powdered; sweeten this with fine sugar; give to an infant the fourth part of a table spoonful four times a day; to a child of two or three years old half a spoonful, and from four years and upwards a spoonful may be taken.”

For the Dysentary. An excellent preventative medicine against the dysentary is—a spoonful of sulphur mixed with molasses, for a grown person, and half the quantity for a child. I am confirmed in the certainty of its efficacy, from long and actual experience, and from extensive observation.

Recipe to make Butter that will keep sweet for Years. Take good cream and churn it thoroughly, then wash out all the buttermilk with brine that has been purified with scalding and skimming; put the butter into clean oak or ash tubs, and keep it covered with a very strong brine, which is made by putting more salt into water than boiling water will dissolve.

In the usual way of putting salt into butter, there is always more or less dirt put into it with the salt, and the salt dissolving, leaves the butter porous, lets in the air, and is the cause of its turning rancid. Milk should not be taken with cream that is to stand some time, as it is one cause of the butter tasting bitter. When any milk settles at the bottom of a vessel of cream, it may be well to stir it from the bottom every day, to let in the air, which may prevent its turning bitter. Cream should be churned till all is turned into pure butter or butter milk, otherwise the butter will taste greasy. It is of importance that all the buttermilk is worked out, it has as much tendency to spoil butter, as blood has meat. Pine kegs are not suitable for butter.

In Ireland, they churn the whole of the milk together. In summer they do not let it stand over the second day at most. The Irish butter made in summer, is equal to that made in autumn.

For coloring Blue. Take five gallons of soft water, one gallon of strong lye, half a pint of salt, half a pint of rum, six ounces of indigo: rub out the indigo daily, until it will change wool green. Dye ten pounds of wool. Double the quantity of indigo for cotton or linnen. The dye may be kept from year to year by being renewed.

An Improvement in Candles. A plan for improving Mould Candles and the quantity of their light, is introduced by a writer in Spafford's American Magazine for October, viz.—“Place a small straw of rye or oats in the centre of the wick the ends of which may be stopped by being dipped in some beeswax and bayberry tallow, to prevent the cavity being filled with tallow, in the mould or in the dipping. Clipping the lower end, opens the straw, which is easily opened at the upper end, by clipping off a little piece; and on being lighted, the extra labor is not regretted.

The Potatoe a substitute for Soap. Take as many potatoes as may be necessary at one time, wash them clean and boil them, drain the water from them and mash them, after which mix them with fresh boiling water, to the consistence of gruel, in which immerse the dirty clothes, and let them remain covered with the mixture twenty four hours, then rub the clothes out of it, and rinse them thoroughly in cold water, and dry them, when they will be completely cleansed.

Potatoes, used as above directed, entirely remove grease and every kind of dirt from white or colored linen or cotton clothes: and in preparing thread linen, or yarn, for the weaver, they supercede the necessity of using soap, or potashes, or of boiling the yarn, of which every person may be satisfied who will take the trouble of trying the experiment. The gruel can be given to hogs after being used.

CURE FOR BOTS. I have, during the last thirty years of my life, been frequently called to prescribe remedies for Bots in Horses, and have until the last four years fallen in with the general opinion that there is no effectual remedy after the insect had arrived at any degree of forwardness; and believing any discovery which tends to preserve the life of so valuable an animal, however simple, ought to be generally known—I would venture to recommend the use of a tea made of Wormwood and Tanzy. I have applied this remedy in every case in which I have been consulted these several years, some were in the last stages of the disorder, and have in every instance found it effectual in destroying the Bots in a short time. Three stalks of each plant is sufficient—it should be steeped in water, and about one quart applied, by turning moderately down the throat. If the first application should not succeed, repeat the same—which I believe will never fail.
