For the settlements to take effect, a significant number of states and county and municipal governments nationwide will need to agree to the proposed terms. Nearly 4,000 lawsuits against the companies have been filed in courts around the country by states and state subdivisions.

States have until August 21, 2021, to decide whether to participate in the settlements. After that, the companies have until September 4 to determine whether a sufficient number of states have signed on. If enough states are participating, their subdivisions will have through January 2, 2022 to join.

New Jersey, including its county and municipal governments, stands to receive well over $600 million. The actual amount received will depend on how many county and municipal governments choose to participate. Participating states will receive more money if more county and municipal governments join the agreements.

“The opioid crisis has devastated too many New Jersey families and ending the opioid epidemic continues to be one of my Administration’s highest priorities,” said Governor Phil Murphy. “By holding these pharmaceutical distributors accountable for their deplorable actions in fueling the marketing and sale of opioids, we are preventing them from creating another drug crisis in the future. The funds received from this settlement will aid critical opioid use disorder resources and programs, which will strengthen our ability to save lives by preventing ov are deeply concerned about an uptick in overdose deaths as individuals continue to struggle with the grief, loss, social isolation, and economic hardship that has shadowed COVID-19.”

“New Jersey has long been a leader in prevention, treatment, and recovery for individuals and families affected by opioid use disorder,” said Acting Human Services Commissioner Sarah Adelman. “This settlement holds bad actors accountable and provides critical resources to expand life-saving programs and practices. We look forward to working with state and local partners as we help communities heal and avoid further devastation caused by the opioid epidemic.”

“As we continue to hold accountable corporations whose bad conduct helped fuel the opioid epidemic in our state, settlements like this are critical to helping undo the damage they have caused,” said Sharon M. Joyce, Director of the Office of the New Jersey Coordinator for Addiction Responses and Enforcement Strategies (NJ CARES). “The funds derived from this settlement will allow communities throughout the state to address the tragic costs of the opioid epidemic by advancing policies to support prevention and harm reduction, and making medication assisted treatment available to those caught in the cycle of addiction that has brought heartache to so many families.”

Highlights of the settlement agreements include:

overdose deaths, the number of residents with substance use disorder, the quantity of opioids delivered, and the population of the state.

Injunctive Relief Overview

The agreement will result in court orders requiring that, for 10 years, Cardinal, McKesson, and AmerisourceBergen must:

- Establish a centralized independent clearinghouse to provide all three distributors and state regulators with aggregated data and analytics about where drugs are going and how often, eliminating blind spots in the current systems used by distributors.
- Use data-driven systems to detect suspicious opioid orders from customer pharmacies.
- Terminate customer pharmacies' ability to receive shipments, and report those companies to state regulators, when they show certain signs of diversion.
- Prohibit shipping of, and also report, suspicious opioid orders.
- Prohibit sales staff from influencing decisions related to identifying suspicious opioid orders.
- Require senior corporate officials to engage in regular oversight of anti-diversion efforts.

to differentiate its own opioid products from competitors' products by deceptively promoting Nucynta and Nucynta ER as safer, milder, and less addictive.

In addition to resolving the State's claims against Janssen, the settlement with Johnson & Johnson would resolve separate claims involving other Johnson & Johnson subsidiaries' part in supplying raw opium for opioid pharmaceutical products.

The settlement with the three opioid distributors was negotiated without New Jersey filing a lawsuit, but while its investigations of the companies were ongoing. Those investigations focused on whether the distributors fulfilled their legal duty to refuse to ship opioids to pharmacies that submitted suspicious drug orders.

The settlements announced today follow New Jersey's announcements of three other resolutions involving companies and individuals whose conduct contributed to the opioid epidemic.

In January 2021, the State settled with John N. Kapoor, the founder of Insys Therapeutics, Inc., for an anticipated $5 million. The settlement resolved allegations that Kapoor unlawfully orchestrated the payment of bribes to New Jersey doctors as part of a nationwide kickback scheme to boost sales of the company's flagship opioid drug Subsys.
