Trenton, NJ – Today, Governor Chris Christie will join company representatives to continue a long-term partnership between the State of New Jersey and global e-commerce leader Amazon.com. Through seven state-of-the-art fulfillment distribution center facilities in our state, and an additional three to be created, Amazon has continued and exceeded its commitment to New Jersey, and has displayed to the rest of the private sector that under a Christie Administration New Jersey is a state in which economic development is growing and thriving.

In 2012, Governor Christie and Amazon representatives joined forces to establish the plan that would eventually flourish into seven distribution center facilities, an additional three more facilities that will generate 2,500 new full-time jobs, and a sustained business climate in the State of New Jersey.
