Transcript:

Governor Christie: I hope that during this season that all of us also take the time to count our blessings, because there are many blessings that each of us have in our own individual lives, and in order to share those blessings with others first we need to count them ourselves. We have to understand ourselves how blessed we are, and then when we understand that I think we can then decide to share those blessings with others by serving our community, by serving our fellow human beings in a way that is truly selfless, and we can do that because we know how blessed we are to have what we have, so I hope during this season, when there's, you know, often more attention on 40% off sales and all that other stuff, that we take a moment to understand the true spirit of the season, which is the great blessings that have been bestowed upon us by God and the obligation that we have to share those blessings with others. Dave's life is an example of that spirit, and that's why I'm so proud to be here today to join my wife in acknowledging that and celebrating it and using it I hope for all of you. I know it will be for us an inspiration as we move through the season to try to make sure that we serve more than just our own self-interest, but we serve the greater, broader interest of our community, because that's a great gift that we can give to everybody, so to all the folks who are here, thank you all very much. Appreciate it very much. We appreciate your hard work and we thank all of you for the inspiration that you are for us, but thank you for having us today. I appreciate it.
